$1,762,490,000 Requested By President For Relief

Estimate Reduces WPA Share Third In Expectation of Industrial Pick-up

Roads and Defense

Transcontinental toll superhighways were frowned on in a report by the Bureau of Public Roads, while the President joined the bureau in urging an alternate plan to meet needs of national defense and "growing peacetime traffic of longer range. Page 2.

Rising Income Foreseen

In a vigorous defense of the Federal relief system, President Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress to appropriate $1,762,490,000 for general relief needs for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Of the total, the President requested $1,477,000,000 for WPA—a one-third reduction below the 1939 grant—and justified the slash on the grounds that improvement is expected in business conditions and private employment "between now and June 30, 1940." The WPA appropriation would take care of slightly more than 2,000,000 workers, compared with an average of 3,000,000 for 1938-1939.

Predicting a national income of $67,000,000,000 for the current year, a $5,000,000,000 increase over 1938, the President asserted that "from the standpoint of private employment, the economic situation has greatly improved."

Answers Critics

In a dig at persons who point to the small volume of unemployment in the totalitarian states, the President asserted that in those nations, "government employment is responsible for the care of a larger portion of the employable population than in this country."

"The principal difference," said the President, "is that in the nations to which I refer, this employment is called employment, whereas in the United States it is called relief."

In the House, where the relief appropriation must originate, it appeared unlikely that any action would be taken for several weeks. Representative Woodrum, of Virginia, acting chairman of the Appropriations sub-committee handling relief matters, has repeatedly indicated that no new legislation will be reported until the WPA investigating committee—of which he is also acting chairman—has issued its preliminary report late next month.

To Continue Fight

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, author of a public works measure conflicting in several particulars with the President's recommendations, indicated he had every intention of continuing the fight for administrative restrictions embodied in his bill.

The Byrnes bill, which had already been partially superseded by the President's reorganization orders consolidating Federal public works agencies, contained a formula for distribution of relief funds among the States on a basis of their proportionate unemployment and population.

The President accepted the prin-

Indians' Performance Is High Spot For 3,000 School Children; Same Groups to Appear Today, Tomorrow

Six thousand persons saw the opening of the best show in town yesterday at Constitution Hall.

Billed as the sixth annual National Folk Festival, it covers America as thoroughly as Uncle Sam's census takers and as vividly as anything ever put on by P. T. Barnum.

From the primitive tomtom beats of the American Indians to the subtle rhythms of a modern dance group from Hampton Institute, the festival takes in all that is rich and colorful in America's folk history.

The clanging bell of Town Crier Amos Kubik, of Provincetown, Mass., opened both matinee and evening performances of the Nation's folk show. Spectators immediately fell under the spell of an atmosphere which can be created only by the vigorous, hell-bent-for-leather enthusiasm of Americans out for a good time.

House Is Packed

A packed house which included almost 3,000 elementary school children registered approval at the National Folk Festival at the open-opening program in the afternoon. Filling the tiers of Constitution Hall and overflowing into the orchestra, the youngsters focused their attention on the stage from the first note of the Town Crier's bell.

High spot of the entire afternoon for most of the students was the performance of three tribes of American Indians. They watched wide-eyed as the befeathered Kiowa braves performed the animated snake dance and painted Apaches wearing high headdresses hopped through their grotesque maidens' dance.

According to their teachers, most of the pupils scarcely could believe that the performers were real. Indians, and had come all the way from Oklahoma and New Mexico just to appear at the festival.

Enthusiasm Contagious

With Miss Gertrude Knott, founder and director of the National Folk Festival, presiding, the program moved smoothly and briskly. Almost without exception, the performers displayed stage presence and self-assurance which would have done credit to professionals. But in addition, they showed a con-

Committee Reports Merit Plan Extension

Excludes WPA as President Urges It Be Covered In

By James D. Secrest.

With the House Civil Service Committee sharply divided, the Ramspeck bill to extend the merit system to all New Deal agencies except the WPA was ordered reported favorably just as the President in his message on relief recommended that WPA be placed under civil service.

"I agree with the President 100 per cent," commented Chairman Ramspeck, "but I could never have gotten the bill out of the committee without exempting the WPA."

Another compromise amendment which the chairman adopted stipulates that any employe who fails to pass the non-competitive tests provided in the bill shall be dismissed from the service within six months.

The Ramspeck bill, which affects more than 200,000 government workers now outside civil service, is believed due for a rough and tumble fight on the House floor. While Republicans are expected to

Senate Passes Bill Boosting FHA Mortgages Limit

The Senate passed by a voice vote yesterday a bill granting the President authority to raise by $1,000,000,000 the present $3,000,000,000 limitation on the amount of insured mortgages the Federal Housing Administration may have outstanding at any one time.

Under the terms of the measure, which has passed the House in altered form, the FHA is also permitted to continue insurance on existing construction.

Remember the Man Past 40, Roosevelt Asks in Jobs Plea

By the United Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 27.—President Roosevelt tonight issued a proclamation to the nation, urging it to find jobs for men over 40.

The Chief Executive, concerned over economic conditions which make it difficult for persons over 40 to find work, but noting an improved business tone, designated the week of April 30 as employment week and urged churches, civic organizations, industry, labor, and the press to stimulate employment opportunity.

The proclamation was based on a report by representatives in industry, labor and the public which analyzed prejudices against the hiring of middle aged workers.

"I am mindful," the President said, "of the fact that among those over 40 years of age are a great body of our most experienced, able, and competent workers; that this group as a whole is not sharing as fully as other age groups in the employment revival; that many of those over 40 have lost their jobs through no personal failing but because of circumstances over which they, and their employers, had no direct control; that among those over 40 and still actively in the labor market are practically the entire group of World War veterans (whose average age is 46), a group that is surely entitled to look to our society for security and economic independence."

Mr. Roosevelt issued his appeal between work periods on the major address he will deliver Sunday afternoon in formally opening the New York World's Fair. The fact that he already has started the

Warrings, U.S. Discuss Tax Settlement

Emmitt's Trial Delayed While Attorneys Bargain on Figures

Government and Warring gang lawyers negotiated yesterday to settle the income taxes owed by the numbers operators on profits of their racket, which once grossed $2,000,000 a year.

The Warrings were eager to pay the claim, it was learned, so that the way might be cleared for them to meet the criminal conspiracy charges against them.

Although the Warrings once gambled in millions, they are reported to be in greatly reduced circumstances by their reverses in the last year. Emmitt Warring, 33, brains of the gang, announced two months ago when he was jailed for jury fixing that he and his brothers had

Soviet Flier Off On Nonstop Hop To New York

Moscow, April 28 (Friday) (AP).—Brig. Gen. Vladimir Kokkinaki, Soviet Russian long distance flier, took off at 4:19 a. m. today (8:19 p. m., E. S. T., Thursday) on a nonstop flight to New York in connection with the opening of New York's World Fair on Sunday.

At 6:52 a. m., two hours and 33 minutes after taking off, Kokkinaki radioed that he was passing over Luga Bay, 75 miles southwest of Leningrad and approximately 400 miles northwest of Moscow, at an altitude of about 15,000 feet. He expected to reach New York in 25 hours.

Kokkinaki was accompanied by Maj. Mikhail Gordienko, veteran Russian navigator and radio operator. The "Great Circle Route" they proposed to follow is on a direct line from Moscow to New York.

By International News Service.

Soviet Russia yesterday moved for acceptance by the United States of Constantine A. Oumansky as Ambassador here to succeed Alexander Troyanovsky.

The State Department has been approached by an emissary from Moscow to ascertain acceptability of Oumansky, who has been acting as Soviet charge d'affaires at Washington since Ambassador Troyanovsky left here five months ago.

3 Pedestrian Underpasses Urged Here

Whitehurst Asks for Tunnels to Guard Lives at Downtown Suicide Corners

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Further efforts to eliminate downtown "suicide corners" were revealed yesterday when it was learned the Department of Highways is considering plans for a pedestrian underpass system at three principal intersections.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of District highways, said he proposed to seek funds for an experimental underpass "within the near future." Although declining to divulge location of the pedestrian safeguard, he indicated it would be established "in the downtown congested area."

Should this method of protecting pedestrian traffic prove successful after a trial period, it was further learned, Capt. Whitehurst has completed preliminary studies for underpasses at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, Fifteenth street and New York avenue and Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

Underpasses Ultimate Solution

Washington's first pedestrian underpass on Benning road northeast—constructed several years ago—is a "definite failure," said the highway director. Built primarily for the the protection of school children crossing the dangerous thoroughfare, the underpass is now seldom used and is shunned by adults who prefer to take their chances in heavy traffic, said Capt. Whitehurst.

"However," he added, "I am convinced the underpass system is our ultimate solution to the pedestrian problem. It affords absolute protection to the walker and provides freer movement for vehicles."

Capt. Whitehurst emphasized the necessity for public support of any program designed for safety and the expedition of traffic.

"If pedestrians pay no more attention to underpasses than they now do to our 'walk' light system," he said, "it would be useless for us to expend money on their construction. That's why I want first to experiment with another underpass in the congested downtown section."

Cost Set at $97,500

To construct one underpass at each of the proposed locations would cost approximately $97,500, Capt. Whitehurst said. It was estimated the Fourteenth and Pennsylvania avenue work would cost $27,033; the underpass at Fifteenth and New York avenue, $38,510, and the one at Twelfth and Pennsylvania avenue, $32,000.

Municipal action to eliminate hazards and improve conditions in the downtown area followed closely a series of stories in The Post disclosing numerous "suicide corners" in various sections of the city. Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer revealed plans to install a system of pedestrian "walk" lights and safety islands following an experimental program to begin at Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue before the end of June.

Committee Favors Measure to Bar Bergdoll From U.S.

By the Associated Press.

The House Military Affairs Committee formally agreed yesterday to recommend legislation aimed at barring Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, World War draft dodger, from ever returning to the United States fom his self-imposed exile in Germany.

Before taking final action on the legislation, introduced by Representative Harness (Republican), Indiana, the committee revised it to limit its application to persons who already have been convicted of desertion from the Nation's armed forces during war-time and who had fled the country to escape punishment.

Harness said the committee decided against applying the legislation to future wars—as he originally proposed—because "we might run into cases where we would want to get the individuals back."

Invitation to Peace

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 27.—The New York Times, in a Washington dispatch by its correspondent, Arthur Krock, says that President Roosevelt proposed to Premier Mussolini, and through him to Chancellor Hitler, to confer with them at sea, and that they rejected the suggestion.

"The President's purpose," the Times says, "was to learn from the dictators at first hand their minimum terms for pledging lasting peace, and if he found these practicable, to offer his services as intermediary."

The time of the overtures was set at "some months ago, probably between the May and September crises."

Delivered to Duce

"On behalf of the President," the article continues, "it was suggested that each of the three statesmen board a naval vessel and come privately together for the unprecedented conference.

"The message was delivered to Signor Mussolini through an agent of Mr. Roosevelt. It is understood here that the Duce transmitted it and was informed that the Fuehrer could not arrange to leave Europe for that purpose, even if he believed a settlement could come of it.

"This revelation of the President's most dramatic effort to bring peace to the world will probably produce a host of denials," Krock commented in his article.

Denials Expected

"By the rules of statemanship and diplomacy it is not in the least mendacious to make such denials, especially concerning publication of a plan that failed and is daring enough to evoke heavy attack, especially in the United States.

"But, whether or not denied, or by whom, the publication establishes the President as having done his utmost to deal with the dictators by personal and conciliatory means . . . whatever Herr Hitler may have to say before the Reichstag tomorrow, he cannot—in the light of this publication—truthfully depict Mr. Roosevelt as preferring truculent speech and policy to peaceful adjustment . . ."

Idea Narrowed Down

Krock says the exact dates and other details of the overtures could not be learned "because those to whom the President communicated his effort and its failure took fright when these details were sought." They did confirm "this extraordinary effort for peace," however, he adds.

The President toyed with the idea of having King George, President Lebrun and Joseph Stalin attend the proposed meeting, Krock says, "but on reflection abandoned that as impracticable and perhaps unnecessary."

Chamberlain Gets Vote of Confidence Of 380 to 143

By the United Press.

London, April 27.—Parliament tonight approved the annual peacetime conscription of 310,000 British youths and voted confidence in Prime Minister Chamberlain's new stand against the dictators, 380 to 143.

The ministry of labor immediately afterward said 1,500,000 men, members of "reserved occupations" heretofore exempt from joining the armed forces, were "now free to volunteer for any service."

President Won't Mention Hitler Sunday, Aide Says

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 27 (AP).—A White House secretary said tonight President Roosevelt would avoid any reference to Reichfuehrer Hitler's Reichstag address tomorrow in the speech he will make Sunday opening the New York World's Fair.

The secretary said the President had told him this.

It was said the President planned to retire early tonight and did not intend to listen on the radio to the German leader.

Gen. Marshall, V.M.I. Man, Nominated for Chief of Staff

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Brig. Gen. George C. Marshall over 35 seniors to be Chief of Staff of the Army, emphasizing his desire for younger men in key defense positions.

The 58-year-old Deputy Chief of Staff will succeed Gen. Malin Craig when Gen. Craig retires in August, and as top officer of the Army in the next four years, will have charge of the vast expansion of air and land forces. He will have the rank of general.

First officer to head the Army in a quarter of a century who was not a West Pointer, Marshall is an alumnus of Virginia Military Institute. He was born in Uniontown, Pa. Noted for his ability to "get jobs done," the tall youthful-appearing general couples ability as a diplomat with driving, intellectual force, Army opinion holds.

At the same time, the President announced the nomination of Col. James C. Magee, executive officer at Walter Reed Hospital, to be Surgeon General of the Army. He will succeed Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds and take rank of major general the end of next month.

The appointment of Gen. Marshall over 21 major generals and 14 brigadiers followed a course set by the President a month ago, when he named a junior rear admiral, Harold R. Stark, to be Chief of Naval Operations. It is also in line with legislation presented to Congress yesterday by the War Department to remove over-age Army officers from the active list and replace them with younger men.

Announced Wednesday, the details of the plan were revealed by

Speech Awaited

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 27.—Adolf Hitler is expected tomorrow to reply to President Roosevelt with a vigorous "no," well wrapped in citations from American history touching on the Spanish-American War and United States relations with Latin America, when he answers the President's appeal for at least a decade of peace.

The Reichsfuehrer, in his speech before the Reichstag, is expected to enunciate his own ideas for maintaining a "just peace for which Germany stands."

He is likely further to recall he previously had advanced peace terms, especially on May 17, 1933 (when he declared no new European war could mend matters and indorsed a Roosevelt appeal to 54 nations for co-operation to assure peace and promote economic recovery) and on March 7, 1936 (when Hitler announced remilitarization of the Rhineland, and suggested a 25-year nonaggression pact of European nations).

May Discuss Conscription

Both those speeches were made to the Reichstag.

Although Roosevelt and his message to Italy and Germany asking for a 10 to 25 year peace agreement will form the major subject of the address, Hitler is expected to deal also with the British government's decision to adopt military conscription and to the Polish defensive alliance with Britain, which Nazis regard as a measure by Poland to get help against Germany.

Laurel, flags and golden eagles decorated the Kroll Opera House where the 862 uniformed members of the Reichstag, largest in Germany's history, are to meet.

Hitler rested tonight for the task of oratory which likely will require an hour and a half (starting around 6 a. m., E. S. T.), but he intended to reread closely the speech which was finished yesterday.

High in that speech may be what are considered here as "highly favorable" replies to Hitler's queries to a number of European nations whether they consider themselves threatened by Germany. (Roosevelt asked for guarantees of the integrity of 31 countries.)

All the answers to Hitler were understood here to have been in the negative, so he may contend that appeal to him was not warranted. Reliable London informants declared that Rumania told Germany she did not see how any nation in Europe could feel safe under present uncertain conditions.

Memel to Send Deputies

Nazis feel they got in a "good diplomatic stroke" in asking these questions. (Premier Mussolini has answered Roosevelt, in a speech declaring the American's proposals "absurd" but pointing to what he said were Italy's own peaceful intentions).

Participating in the Reichstag for the first time tomorrow will be two

By Harlan Miller

WAR TALK: Another illustration of undue weight for pure conversation by President Roosevelt is the furor about his "secret" opinion, no longer a secret one hour after he uttered it one evening at the White House, that there is a 50-50 chance of a European war within 90 days.

Mrs. Taft

* * * *

Obviously such an opinion can be nothing but purely conversatio al, since no one man, not even Hitler, has a "war schedule" on his desk, fixed and certain like a baseball schedule. The President might as well have used any set of figures from 1,000 to 1 to 1 to 1,000.

* * * *

How can any man appraise accurately whether the chances of war are 50-50, or 10 to 1, or 100 to 1, or 20 to 3? Each day the scene changes, forces fluctuate. The equation is filled with imponderables, and the human equation is not the least of the unknowns.

* * * *

If the chances are 100 to 1 against war on any given day, then by the laws of probability (if those laws apply!) they remain 100 to 1 for every day of Mr. Roosevelt's 90 days, and never reach odds of 100 to 90. You can quote any odds that seem plausible to you, and still be in a position to say, when war comes (or doesn't come) "I told you so!"

Conversation remains conversation; even what Hitler says this morning at six.

"—rehearsals for Sen. Taft"

Apparently the chief fault in Senator Taft's oratory is lack of preparation. If he's to remain a top Presidential possibility, the Capital thinks he must write out his speeches, memorize them or master the art of reading them, and then rehearse them over and over.

Maybe it's up to popular Mrs. Taft, no slouch at oratory herself, to make him rehearse, using a floor lamp as a microphone.

CAPITAL SMALL TALK: In the State Dept. corridor: "Any man's opinions on war and peace are as good as any other's, but to prevent war is an expert's job." . . . In the White House foyer: "The President has to talk so often that he can't mean it all positively."

* * * *

FOLLIES OF 1940: Most active campaigners for the Presidency this week seem to be GOP's Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, and Paul McNutt, of Indiana, in the other camp . . . The Capital mails are heavy with their cards and pamphlets . . . In print their records (and claims) sound strangely impressive . . . The Garner candidacy is drooping . . . Third term talk has boomed . . . But New Dealers keep trying to slip aces to Harry Hopkins . . . Dark horses of the month: Govs. Bricker of Ohio and Stark of Missouri.

"—can't choose her own hats"

As in Hollywood, the actors on the Capital's vast stage are often so definitely "typed" that they find it hard to be themselves. For better or for worse, they must remain tough talkers (Ickes) or deep thinkers (Wallace and Adolph Berle, who supposedly wrote the last note to Hitler) or mystery men (Corcoran) or aristocrats (Lodge, Tydings, Sumner Welles).

Maybe they'd rather play Hamlet or Bottom, but it's hopeless.

For example, Secretary Perkins has been typed as the Lady in the Tricorn hat, and that makes it difficult for her to wear any other hat . . . She appeared in another one the other day for the cameramen, but they made her get a tricorn. . . . It's almost enough to keep a lady out of politics.

Incidentally, someone called her "Madame" and she replied once again, emphatically:

"Don't call me Madame; that title has only one connotation to me."

Like Mr. Roosevelt himself, the Assistant Secretary of War, Col. Louis Johnson, is bearish about war.

At a cocktail party he told several eminent gentlemen that he expects war by August 15 (thus giving Hitler 20 days longer than FDR does). . . .

Mr. Johnson, of course, has lots of inside dope. But without impugning his motives, I can't forget that he has the Army's supplies to worry about, preparedness to promote, national defense to devil him and his boss, Secretary Woodring, not to mention big appropriations to get on the Hill. . . . Just to cheer him up, I'll bet him a dinner at the Carlton against a lunch at the War Dept. cafeteria that there isn't a major war even by August 20.

Florida Canal Bill Sent to Senate Floor

Committee, 10 to 9, Reports Without Recommendation

A bill authorizing construction of the $200,000,000 Florida ship canal, long a sore point of controversy between White House and Congress, yesterday was ordered reported to the Senate without recommendation.

The non-committal report was ordered by a 10-to-9 vote of the Senate Commerce Committee, after advocates of the project failed to muster enough strength for a favorable recommendation.

Barkley "For It"

Senate Majority Leader Barkley later announced he was "for it" and predicted Senate consideration next week. But Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, who vainly fought any committee action on the measure, called it "just another effort to get aboard the gravy train."

The House Rivers and Harbors Committee already has favorably reported a companion measure by a vote of 10 to 6, but no House action has yet been taken.

Work on the 195-mile canal across the Florida Peninsula actually was commenced by the President in 1935 with a $5,400,000 allocation of relief funds. But construction was abandoned when Congress the following year refused to appropriate funds.

Early this year the President recommended resumption of the project because of "commercial military needs." Favorable reports on the project have been received from the Navy and Commerce departments and from the Army Corps of Engineers.

Huge Cost Cited

Opponents have cited the huge cost of the project, and have challenged the economic value of the undertaking and its benefits to shipping, while some Florida residents have expressed fears of possible seawater damage to crops.

The Senate report came on a motion by Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, superseding a motion by Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, to report the bill favorably. Senator Vandenburg (Republican), of Michigan, vigorous opponent of the project, said he was prevented by the parliamentary situation from offering a motion to kill the bill.

Johnson Not at Meeting

A possible tie vote was averted when Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, remained away from the meeting. Johnson explained he had been prevented by Foreign Relations Committee hearings from hearing testimony on the bill.

Voting to report the bill were Senators Sheppard, of Texas; Caraway, of Arkansas; Overton, Bilbo, of Mississippi; Maloney, of Connecticut; Radcliffe, of Maryland; Pepper, Lee, of Oklahoma; Hill, of Alabama, and Mead, of New York (all Democrats).

Voting "no" were Senators Clark, of Missouri; Donahey, of Ohio, and Guffey, of Pennsylvania (Democrats), and McNary, of Oregon; Vandenberg, White, of Maine; Gibson, of Vermont; Barbour, of New Jersey, and Bailey (Republicans).

Text of Message on Roads

The text of the President's message to Congress transmitting report of the Bureau of Public Roads follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, concurred in by the Secretary of War, inclosing a report of the Bureau of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, on the feasibility of a system of transcontinental toll roads and a master plan for free highway development.

The report, prepared at the request of the Congres, is the first complete assembly of data on the use being made of our national highway network. It points definitely to the corrective measures of greatest urgency and shows that existing improvements may be fully utilized in meeting ultimate highway needs.

It emphasizes the need of a special system of direct interregional highways, with all necessary connections through and around cities, designed to meet the requirements of the national defense and the needs of a growing peace-time traffic of longer range.

Stresses Superhighways

It shows that there is need for superhighways, but makes it clear that this need exists only where there is congestion on the existing roads, and mainly in metropolitan areas. Improved facilities, needed for the solution of city street congestion, are shown to occupy a fundamental place in the general replanning of the cities indicated as necessary in the report "Our Cities" issued in September, 1937, by the National Resources Committee.

The report also points definitely to difficulties of right-of-way acquisition as obstacles to a proper development of both rural highways and city streets, and makes important and useful recommendations for dealing with these difficulties.

I call the special attention of the Congress to the discussion of the principle of "excess-taking" of land for highways. I lay great emphasis on this because by adopting the principle of "excess-taking" of land, the ultimate cost to the Government of a great national system of highways will be greatly reduced.

For instance, we all know that it is largely a matter of chance if a new highway is located through one man's land and misses another man's land a few miles away. Yet the man who, by good fortune, sells a narrow right-of-way makes, in most cases, a handsome profit through the increase in value of all of the rest of his land. That represents an unearned increment of profit—a profit which comes to a mere handful of lucky citizens and which is denied to the vast majority.

Basis for Needed Action

Under the exercise of the principle of "excess-taking" of land, the Government, which puts up the cost of the highway, buys a wide strip on each side of the highway itself, uses it for the rental of concessions and sells it off over a period of years to home builders and others who wish to live near a main artery of travel. Thus the Government gets the unearned increment and reimburses itself in large part for the building of the road.

In its full discussion of the whole highway problem and the wealth of exact data it supplies, the report indicates the broad outlines of what might be regarded as a master plan for the development of all of the highway and street facilities of the nation.

I recommend the report for the consideration of the Congress as a basis for needed action to solve our highway problems.

Move to Exclude Bergdoll From U. S. Hits Constitutional Entanglement

A meeting of the House Reorganization Committee to vote on the Taber resolution disapproving President Roosevelt's "Reorganization Plan No. 1" has been called for next Tuesday, it was learned last night.

TABER

House Majority Leader Rayburn said the House will act on the committee's report "soon" thereafter. By the quick vote, leaders expect to clinch approval of the welfare, works and lending mergers.

Chairman Mansfield (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, yesterday left the Naval Hospital, where he was treated for an intestinal disorder. He was expected to return to his office within a week or ten days.

The House approved and sent to the Senate a conference report on the $1,700,000,000 Treasury-Postoffice supply bill.

The House accepted a revised O'Mahoney amendment which prohibits free mailing of reports by government agencies except on request and requires periodical reports of the cost of free mail. The House also adopted an amendment requiring use of 25 per cent cotton in twine used by the Postoffice Department, an amendment sponsored by the southern "cotton bloc."

The nomination of Alexander W. Weddell, of Virginia, as the first United States Ambassador to Spain under the nationalist government, was confirmed by the Senate.

The House Judiciary Committee sidetracked from congressional action this session a bill proposing a United States administrative court of appeals, to review action of numerous Federal boards and commissions.

Under a joint resolution introduced by Senator Wiley (Republican, of Wisconsin, President Roosevelt would be empowered to enter into a "barter" agreement with Great Britain for disposal of surplus cheese and dairy products.

A bill to relieve owners of motorboats less than 16 feet long from some of the equipment requirements of present law was introduced by Representative Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, at the request of the Department of Commerce.

The Department said such boats apparently "do not have sufficient space for carrying all the equipment required of larger boats."

President Roosevelt vetoed a bill appropriating $50,000 of Federal funds to aid in building a public school at the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana. The President said that at the end of the fiscal year 1938, the school had on hand $27,000 and "this would indicate that it is not in a serious condition financially."

Free Highway System for Defense Urged

President Tells Congress Toll Plan Would Not Work

Discouraging a proposed transcontinental superhighway toll system as solution to the Nation's highway congestion and traffic safety problem, the United States Bureau of Public Roads yesterday submitted to Congress an alternate plan with an appeal from President Roosevelt that it be considered "to meet requirements of national defense and the needs of a growing peacetime traffic of longer range."

In urging Congress to carefully study recommendations of the bureau for a substitute highway system, the President called special attention to the principle of "excess-taking" of land for construction of roads as a means of partially defraying costs. By taking land in excess of the amount needed for actual rights of way, the President pointed out, it could later be rented or sold after completion of the highways and its value had been enhanced, to reimburse the Government for its part of the cost.

Tolls Held Inadequate

The proposed superhighway system, the bureau reported, could not be supported by tolls and would not solve any considerable part of the problem of providing adequate highway facilities.

The 211-page report was prepared at Congressional request to determine "the feasibility of building . . . superhighways not exceeding three in number, running in a general direction from the Eastern to Western portion of the United States and, not exceeding three in number, running in a general direction from the Northern to the Southern portion of the United States, including the feasibility of a toll system on such roads."

The construction of such a system, the bureau reported, is entirely feasible from a physical standpoint, but would not come within 50 per cent of being self-supporting if operated as a toll facility. The bureau suggested instead a system of interregional highways designed to meet requirements of national defense and the needs of growing motor traffic.

It was estimated that the six proposed superhighways would have approximately a total length of 14,336 miles and cost at least $2,899,800,000—or an average of $202,270 a mile. Tolls over a period of 16 years—the longest period it would make traffic estimates—the bureau said, would provide less than 40 per cent of a conservative estimate of debt service, maintenance and operating costs.

The average annual expenditure for the period 1945-60 necessary to finance construction, maintain and operate the superhighway system was estimated at $184,054,000—or about $12,840 a mile per year. If a toll charge of 1 cent a mile for passenger vehicles and 3.5 cents for trucks was established, the bureau stated, the annual average revenue during the same period would be only $72,140,000.

Bureau's Master Plan

The bureau's "master plan" as a substitute included:

Construction of direct interregional highways, with necessary connections through and around large cities.

Modernization of present Federal aid highways.

Elimination of hazards at railroad grade-crossings.

Improvement of secondary and feeder roads.

Creation of a Federal agency with power to acquire rights-of-way for highway and street improvements.

The inter-regional highways if constructed on a national scale would extend approximately 27,000 miles and could be established by modernizing and improving existing routes and building new roads where necessary to provide more direct travel.

The Gallup Poll

American Public Approves Roosevelt's Peace Message; Waits Hitler's Answer

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Chancellor Adolf Hitler answers President Roosevelt's peace proposal today "in the name of the German people." The following exclusive survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion shows the reaction of the American people to President Roosevelt's proposal, as ascertained in an informal Nation-wide referendum. Institute surveys are exclusive in The Washington Post.

New York, April 27.—As an anxious world awaits today Chancellor Adolf Hitler's reply to President Roosevelt's suggestion for a conference to settle European war problems, virtually complete returns from a Nation-wide survey of the American Institute of Public Opinion indicate that the people of the United States approve the President's message by a substantial majority.

GEORGE GALLUP

The survey, conducted since Roosevelt's message was sent to the dictators, shows that an average of three voters in every five throughout the county support the President's dramatic stroke.

The verdict of the country has added significance because Chancellor Hitler is expected to criticize Roosevelt as being out of step with American public opinion in this instance, and because American public opinion has previously been opposed to Presidential initiative of this sort in European affairs.

The President also has been criticized for his move by some of his domestic opponents.

The Institute referred the matter to a representative cross-section of the Nation's voters, asking:

"Do you approve or disapprove of President Roosevelt's action in sending his message to Hitler and Mussolini, suggesting a conference to settle Europe's war problems?"

The actual vote is:

Approve Roosevelt's action . . 60%
Disapprove Roosevelt's action 40%

Analysis of the survey shows the sharpest party division on a question of foreign policy in many months. The President's action is indorsed by 60 per cent of the Democratic voters, but opposed by 53 per cent of the Republicans.

South And East Support President

Although a majority of voters in all sections approve the President's proposal for a ten-year peace pledge which would be followed by an international conference, the greatest support for President Roosevelt comes from the South and from the States of the North and East. The most evenly balanced opinion comes from the Middle West, the survey shows.

Comments of voters in all parts of the United States show that the chief reasons underlying American support of the President's proposal are:

1. Belief that Roosevelt's stroke was a definite and well-timed move toward international understanding and peace.

2. The feeling that, at the very least, Roosevelt's move has postponed war.

3. Belief that Roosevelt's appeal will reach a sympathetic audience among the common people of European nations.

Many voters also said they thought Roosevelt's note "places the responsibility for what happens in the future on Germany and Italy."

The idea of an international conference at his time has strong appeal to the American public.

4 More Named In Insurance Slaying of 100

Suspect Located by Chance Believed Head Of Poisoning Ring

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, April 27.—The identity of two more suspected key figures in a wholesale arsenic murder service ring was disclosed tonight with the issuance of warrants for the arrest of four more persons on murder charges.

Named in the warrants were:

Morris Bolber, also known as "Louis the Rabbi," who, police charged, organized the murder for insurance syndicate eight years ago.

Mrs. Rose Carina, also known as "Rose Ruggieri" and "Rose Lisi," and described by authorities as the "girl with the kiss of death."

Caesar Valenti, reputed "brains" of the ring.

Ralph Polselli, described as a former sweetheart of Mrs. Carina Favato, confessed arsenic slayer of three.

All but Valenti, who is under arrest in New York, are fugitives.

Bolber and Mrs. Carina, his one-time secretary, fled the city when the first machinations of the ring blamed for more than 100 deaths were revealed, authorities said. They said Mrs. Carina was wanted in connection with "at least" five murders.

Valenti, located by chance after he was arrested on a minor charge in New York and turned over to immigration authorities, directed activities of the service that catered to wives tired of their husbands and willing to poison them for their insurance, according to investigators.

Before the warrants were issued, three more women and a man, the latest defendants in the plot, were ordered held without bail for further hearing after a magistrate described them as "conscienceless, wholesale murderers." One of the women, Mrs. Josephine Romualdo, accused of complicity in the poison death of her husband, fainted as the magistrate ordered them held.

The others held were Emilio Muscelli, accused of the death of Giuseppi di Martino; Mrs. Marie Woloshyn, charged with having her husband run down and killed by an automobile so she could collect his $10,600 life insurance, and Mrs. Agnes Mandiuk, allegedly involved in the death of her husband.

200 Miss Death As Bank Bandit's Bomb Fails Him

Birmingham, Ala., April 27 (U.P.).—Failure of a percussion cap to explode a home-made bomb of ten sticks of dynamite today kept a middle-aged real estae agent, Albert Durrett, of Nashville, from making a shambles of the Birmingham Trust and Savings Co., which employs 200 persons.

Durrett attempted to set off the dynamite when the bank's president, John S. Coleman, shouted for help instead of handing over $250,000. Durrett was held under $50,000 bond after pleading guilty to a charge of attempting to rob the bank.

Police said it was a "miracle" Durrett's bag of dynamite, connected with a light dry cell battery and a percussion cap, failed to blast the building when he pushed a button designed to set off the charge. The dynamite was sufficient to have wrecked the building and killed all within a radius of 30 feet, officers believed.

15 Pupils, Driver Injured as Train Hits School Bus

Concord, Mass., April 27 (A.P.).—Fifteen children were injured today when a school bus and a freight train were in a collision which appeared likely to cost the bus driver his life.

Officials at the Emerson Hospital said they expected to release all of the children tonight, most of whom were only bruised or slightly cut. The driver, James H. Finnigan, 67, suffered a severe head injury.

The strange collision took place almost in the business district. The bus was part way across the tracks when the driver saw the Boston-bound freight bearing down on him. He jammed on the brakes and backed up, an act that may have saved the lives of several children. Only the front part of the bus was struck.

Blue-Eyed Norse Prince Olaf Captures New York With Grin

Jolly Modern Viking, With Princess, Gets Noisy Welcome After His Liner Sinks Pilot Boat (All Hands Saved)

By Inez Robb.
By International News Service.

New York, April 27 (INS).—A ruddy, blue-eyed Norse prince, like the Vikings of old, sailed into New York harbor today, to capture the city with his charm, his grin, and his good humor.

Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, the modern Viking, and his wife, Crown Princess Martha, advance guard of many royal visitors bound for New York and the World's Fair, rested tonight in their suite at the Waldorf-Astoria after a triumphant and strenuous day.

Tug boats hooted a greeting in the harbor, a 21-gun salute boomed from Governors Island, and the pair had a ticker-tape embellished ride up lower Broadway to City Hall with a motorcycle police escort.

But the day began none too auspiciously when the Norwegian-American liner Oslofjord, bearing the royal party, rammed and sank the pilot boat Sandy Hook in fog-bound Ambrose Channel shortly after 6 a. m.

The pilot boat's crew of 16 and the nine pilots aboard were quickly rescued by the crew of the Oslofjord before the Sandy Hook sank a mile off Ambrose Lightship. The liner was not damaged.

He Didn't See Crash

"I was in my bath at the time of the collision," the handsome, strapping, 35-year-old crown prince told reporters. "I didn't see anything . . .

"A bath's a fine place to be when there's an accident," he added, with a rueful grin.

Neither did the crown princess see anything of the accident, she said.

The Oslofjord was two hours late in reaching quarantine where the crown prince and princess and their party transferred to the cutter Riverside, the city's official reception boat.

The royal Norwegians, the first of this reigning house to visit the United States, were piped over the side of the Oslofjord and onto the Riverside by New York's police band. The prince, followed by his sweet but rather shy princess, posed for cameramen on the gangway with high humor.

As tug boats, excursion steamers and a minor flotilla of welcoming craft pulled their whistles wide open, prince, princess and press shouted at each other in an attempt to be heard.

"How do you like your reception?" a reporter screamed at the crown prince, wedged into a corner of the Riverside's salon where even his police guard couldn't get to him.

"Very fine," bellowed his royal highness with a slight Oxford accent. He took off his royal topper to reveal a thinning thatch of reddish blond hair.

Mayor Grasps Hand

At Pier A, at the Battery, Mayor LaGuardia waited to welcome the visitors and to escort them to City Hall for a more formal greeting.

As the Prince and Princess stepped off the gangplank to their pier, New York's "Little Flower," abeam, grasped the Prince's hand and cried, "A sincere welcome to New York!"

Deputy Mayor Henry H. Curran greeted the Norwegians as they arrived at City Hall for the official reception.

"There is one thing to thank you for," he said, "and that is the old-fashioned historical manner in which you came into port this morning. The vikings of old brooked no obstacles when they were on the high seas, and neither did you this morning. When an antiquated pilot boat stood in your bath you simply sank it, and did it neatly and beautifully, without hurting anybody. You brought back the spirit of the ancient viking days of wooden ships and iron men. We probably needed a new pilot boat by this time, anyway!"

Plan to Merge Federal Police Units Dropped

Government Fears Move Might Create Group Similar to OGPU

Jealousy among Government enforcement and investigative agencies has blocked demands for coordinating their work in the departmental reshuffling under the reorganization bill, responsible sources said yesterday.

Meanwhile, Treasury officials confirmed reports that Secretary Morgenthau had abandoned plans for consolidation of the Treasury enforcement agencies, fearing he would set a precedent for an OGPU or other powerful "secret police" organization, such as have proven scourges in certain European countries.

Secretary's Fears Shared

It developed that Morgenthau's fear of a powerful secret police was shared quite generally by other Government officials.

Jealousy among the agencies, about 15 in number, however, has prevented much needed co-ordination of work for years, it is said. Lack of co-ordination, it is explained, results in duplication of functions. In some cases, two different agencies are at work on the same case, with no co-operation—in fact, with mutual suspicion.

The condition, however, by no means exists among all the 15 agencies. At the same time, failure to work out a general plan of co-ordination is due to it.

Harcourt A. Morgan Renominated for TVA

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Harcourt A. Morgan, of Knoxville, Tenn., for reappointment to the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Dr. Morgan would begin serving a new nine-year term May 18.

The TVA's expert on fertilizers and nitrates, Dr. Harcourt Morgan moved into the TVA Board chairmanship last year after the President dismissed Dr. Arthur E. Morgan from the job for "contumacy."

Miss Talley Beaten in Fight Over Child, Director Swears

Effort to Regain Her Custody Caused Assault and Denunciation As 'Kidnaper,' Former Singer Says

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 27.—A Hollywood director testified today Marion Talley was beaten on the head and called "kidnaper" in a previous effort to gain custody of the 4-year-old daughter she now seeks by court action.

Aubrey Scotto, of Los Angeles, said the attack and tongue-lashing occurred last February when he and the former Metropolitan Opera soprano visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Nelson in suburban Marmaroneck where the child was staying.

Mrs. Nelson is a sister of Adolph Eckstrom, Miss Talley's estranged husband, with whom the child has lived almost since birth.

"Call the Police!"

Scotto said when they approached the Nelson home, Mrs. Nelson shouted to her son: "Ben, kidnapers; call the police."

Miss Talley held the little girl in her arms outside the house, Mrs. Nelson snatched the child away and the attack followed, Scotto testified. He said he intervened with the suggestion that they go into the house, and that Miss Talley and the child played inside until the police arrived.

After they identified themselves to police, he continued, Miss Talley was pushed out the door. The custody suit then was filed in White Plains, disclosing for the first time the Talley-Eckstrom marriage and her motherhood, but was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction and refiled in New York.

Scotto, who undertook amateur sleuthing as a bit of dramatic by-play and gesture of friendship for Miss Talley, testified Eckstrom once said he had been untrue to Miss Talley.

Promised to Find Child

The director said he and his wife had become fond of Miss Talley when he made her first movie, "Follow Your Heart," and that he promised to help locate the child on a business trip here last year.

"I said I'm in the habit of dramatizing and might be able to find out where the child is," Scotto said.

Scotto, who described himself as an operatic baritone for several years before entering the movies, testified he worked himself into the confidence of Eckstrom, Miss Talley's former teacher and accompanist, by taking seven vocal lessons at $5 each in Eckstrom's modest apartment-studio.

Student's Auto Found Wedged Between Trees

Prince Georges County police and the Bladensburg rescue squad were summoned to the University of Maryland last night on a report of an automobile accident.

They found a crowd of students gathered around an automobile wedged tightly between two trees on the campus. John Tregellis, Baltimore student and owner of the car, said he left it parked on the road a short while before.

Other students recalled that a professor's car was "misplaced" several years ago under similar circumstances. It was found in the university auditorium.

Norway Wants No Guaranty, Leader Says

Pledges Regarded As Prejudicial to Scandinavian Liberty

By C. J. Hambro
By Wireless and Special Wire to The Post.

Oslo, April 27.—On April 14 Lord Halifax in the House of Lords and Neville Chamberlain, in the House of Commons, declared His Majesty's government would feel itself bound at once to lend the Greek or Rumanian government, as the case might be, all support in its power if the independence of Greece or Rumania should be threatened in such a way that the government of these countries considered it vital to resist with their national forces.

Similar declarations have been made in regard to various other states, and it has been suggested both in Parliament and in the press that this new policy of security should be extended to the Scandinavian countries.

So far it is not known under what terms the guaranty has been given, whether it is a unilateral declaration or a reciprocal obligation of some kind. But without in any way reducing the importance of the declarations made in the present emergency, it can no doubt be said that the northern countries have not requested and do not wish any such guaranty, nor have they been approached on this subject.

Guaranties Avoided

It is the declared policy of all the Scandinavian countries to keep outside any bloc of powers that may be formed and to observe a strict and unimpeachable neutrality. There is also among the people themselves a deep-rooted feeling that guaranties of any kind would be prejudical to their national independence.

The very idea that the Scandinavian countries should need any special guaranty from any state or group of states is foreign to the northern countries and would seem to imply that they had dangerous national or political disagreements with some nation or other, which is not the case.

All the northern states are members of the League of Nations and signatories to the Kellogg-Briand pact for renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy. It would probably be an exaggeration to state they have today an unconditioned and implicit belief in the collective security built upon the Covenant and the Kellogg-Briand treaty. But on the other hand they do not feel convinced that any special guaranty given by one or more of their co-signatories would materially lessen any eventual danger of aggression from an outside power.

Promises Discredited

Of course, the great difficulty of the moment, perhaps the greatest, is the general distrust among governments, States and nations. What might be called the international political credit system has completely broken down. No State believes whole-heartedly in any promise given by any other State today. Covenants, pacts, treaties, conventions and agreements violated on the slightest pretext, and obligations, undertakings, promises and guaranties unfulfilled have left the world in a state of moral chaos. As states have gone off gold so they have gone off their whole system of political responsibilities. It is hardly the opportune moment for inspiring confidence. That cannot be done any longer by words, however beautiful and reassuring. It can only be done by deeds, however modest.

The Nations have lost interest in guaranties on paper. They are not deluded quite so easily as they used to be. They even have a lurking suspicion of slogans and are not convinced that democracy or the reverse is the true touchstone of action taken by great powers.

The northern countries are fully aware that an absolute condition for remaining neutral in case of a European conflict must be to arm to such an extent that no attempt on their territories could meet with an immediate success, and to be prepared to defend their independence to the utmost of their power. That is why all four countries, with the consent of all political parties, have voted larger credits for national defense than ever before.

The four nations are also fully persuaded that it will be in the interest of every country and of the future of European civilization that one corner of Europe should remain neutral if the worst should come to the worst, and they are convinced that the world is longing for hopes once more and also for plain speech.

That is why the attitude of the President of the United States has been followed with so keen an attention in most countries. The United States is in a singular position. It has not extended its territories as a result of the war. It does not rule conquered nations. Its great cities and its frontiers are in no immediate exterior danger. Akin to all the nations of Europe and indebted to all of them in spite of war loans, it alone can hope to understand and be understood, and to incur a minimum of suspicion.

When the United States unreservedly and openly emerges from the shadows of isolation there will be a possiblity of starting upon a fresh era of international co-operation and co-ordination.

Gen. Marshall, V.M.I. Man, Nominated for Chief of Staff

Harris & Ewing.

Brig. Gen. George Catlett Marshall (left) was nominated to be Chief of Staff of the Army yesterday by President Roosevelt to succeed Gen. Malin Craig, who will retire in August. Marshall's appointment was in line with decision to bring younger blood into the Army high command. At the same time, Col. James Carre Magee (right) was nominated to be surgeon general of the Army with rank of major general

Army

Secretary of War Woodring in a letter to Congress yesterday. Seeking to obviate "stagnation" and move officers through the grades at regular intervals, the plan would reduce materially the age of officers reaching rank of general.

Forced Retirement

Under the legislation, when the number of deaths, retirements and resignations of officers does not amount to 4.35 per cent of the total number of promotion list officers, the Army's oldest officers would be forced on the retired list, starting at the age of 63 and going down to a possible 45 years, to make up the required number.

Normally, however, colonels less than 60, lieutenant colonels less than 58, majors less than 55 and captains and lower less than 50 would be exempt. If this action did not eliminate enough officers, the age limits for each grade would be lowered a year or more as necessary.

Officers retired under the proposal would receive retired pay amounting to three-quarters of their active pay. Air Corps officers holding temporary advanced rank would be considered as being in the advanced rank for purposes of the plan.

Another feature of proposed legislation would "freeze" the present number of officers in the ranks of major, lieutenant colonel and colonel, until the percentage of officers in those ranks is reduced from 40 to 34 per cent of the total number of officers. If this is not done, Secretary Woodring said, the Army will have too many higher ranking officers under the increases planned.

Not since the early part of the century has a brigadier general been named to the highest Army post, officers declared yesterday in commenting on Marshall's appointment. Many expressed surprise that the President passed over Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, whose senior position and outstanding record had made him a favorite.

Entering the Army in 1902 as a second lieutenant, Gen. Marshall immediately joined the Thirtieth Infantry in the Philippines, where the insurrection was in full blast. Returning the following year, he attended the Army schools at Fort Leavenworth, remaining there until 1911 as an instructor. Just before the World War, he was successively aide-de-camp to Gens. Hunter Liggett and J. Franklin Bell.

Pershing Aide-de-Camp

Sailing for France in June, 1917, Marshall served as assistant chief of staff of the First Division and on the general staff of the First Army. After the armistice he became aide-de-camp to Gen. Pershing, a post he held until 1924. He is known as a great favorite of the A. E. F. commander.

After the war, Gen. Marshall added laurels to his name by reorganizing the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., where he was assistant commandant. He served in China, commanded Fort Screven, Ga., and Fort Moultrie, S. C., and headed the Fifth Infantry Brigade before coming to Washington last July as assistant chief of staff for war plans. He became deputy chief in October.

Tentative plans call for Marshall to go to Brazil shortly on a special mission for the State Department. With a view to promoting closer relations with South American defense forces it is said that he may bring back the Brazilian army chief for an inspection of American Army posts.

On Flying Inspection

A firm believer in the infantry as the winner of wars and the need for disciplined armies, Marshall keeps closely up on developments in aviation. He is now on a flying inspection trip of Air Corps stations. Aside from his job, his chief interests are his family, gardening and horse-back riding. Married, he has three setpchildren, none of his own.

The nominee for surgeon general is a native of Ireland. Graduating from Jefferson Medical College, Pa., Col. Magee has been in the active military service since 1907. In the World War he was in France two years, serving as assistant chief surgeon of the First Army in the St. Miniel and Meuse Argonne offensives.

Post surgeon at Fort Myer, Va., from 1927 to 1931, Col. Magee then moved to Philadelphia, where he served as instructor of all medical detachments of the Pennsylvania National Guard. He came to Walter Reed Hospital in 1935.

Loudspeakers were set up tonight on street corners and Unter den Linden, leading to the operahouse, was in holiday colors.

British Action Belittled

The press continued to attack and belittle British conscription, while it praised Yugoslav Foreign Minister Cinca-Markovich, who is here discussing relations with the Italian-German axis.

Said Goebbels' Der Angriff: "Belgrade has remained true to friendship with Berlin and has openly deepened that friendship at a very important time."

Belgrade, the paper concluded, recognizes that "friendship with Germany is of more value than an English guarantee—including asthmatic military service."

Congress Votes $153,000,000 To Equip Army of 400,000

Following by one day the beginning of the air expansion program, Congress yesterday passed the second increment of the emergency defense program, and presented President Roosevelt with funds for equipping an army of 400,000 men with the latest fighting equipment.

In speedy succession the House and Senate approved legislation carrying $153,000,000 in direct appropriations and contract authorizations for strengthening of seacoast defenses, expanding the fleet and providing new tanks, artillery and semi-automatic rifles for the Army and National Guard. The new armament will enable the 400,000-man force to go instantly into action with the best weapons money can buy, officials said.

Meanwhile, disclosure yesterday of the terms of the $50,000,000 aircraft order let by the Army Wednesday revealed that warplanes capable of speeds in excess of 400 miles-an-hour will be procured. A $2,180,728 contract was let to the Lockheed Co. of Burbank, Calif., for two-engined "pursuit interceptors" similar to the experimental plane which recently set a transcontinental speed record.

Funds Asked for Fleet

Other defense developments were:

The Navy asked Congress to authorize funds for extensive repairs and alterations of the battleships Tennessee, California, Colorado, Maryland and West Virginia at a total cost of $8,910,000. The work is needed to refit the vessels for combat, it was said.

The House received from its Merchant Marine Committee a formal recommendation for the construction of a third chain of locks for the Panama Canal, costing $277,000,000. In recommending the legislation, designed to keep the canal open for quick passage of the United States fleet from one ocean to another in time of war, the group rejected proposals for constructing an additional canal across Nicaragua or Mexico.

Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission, recommended to the same House committee the broadening of laws permitting the Government to take over privately owned ships for naval use in war.

The Navy received two awards of public works funds, $33,830 for new power lines at Norfolk, and $350,000 for improving Charlotte Amalie Harbor in the Virgin Islands, designated for later development as a naval base.

Believed Largest Contract

The largest Army contract went to Curtiss-Wright, for single-engine planes, believed to be the largest single order ever awarded, it was for $12,872,389. A $1,073,445 contract went to the Bell Aircraft Corp. for single-engined "pursuit interceptors." The high-speed craft, designed for quick-climbing and attack on enemy bombers, carry a 37 mm. cannon as well as machine guns.

Other orders were for bombers and photographic planes. The Consolidated Aircraft Co. received a $2,880,000 order for heavy four-engined bombing craft, an improvement of the "flying fortress" type. The Beech Aircraft Corp. obtained the $528,749 contract for photographic planes. Besides these awards, Assistant Secretary of War Johnson announced that a $19,000,000 order for new type attack-bombers, and miscellaneous contracts for engines and parts will be let shortly.

Under the second deficiency appropriation bill sent to the White House, the Army will receive $110,000,000, partly in contract authorization, to procure the new fighting equipment, and $6,539,287 for improving coast defenses in continental United States, Panama and Hawaii. The Navy is allowed $36,500,000 to carry forward the construction of ships already under way.

Income Payments Fatal 16 Billion In First Quarter

Income payments by individuals in the United States totaled $16,105,000,000 in the first quarter, showing an increase of 2 per cent over the aggregate of $15,788,000,000 reported in the corresponding 1938 period, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins announced yesterday.

The improvement in March was even greater than for the first quarter, the aggregate for last month showing a 3.3 percent advance over the total for March 1938. Income payments, as measured by the monthly series of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, comprise wages, saleries, dividends, interest, entrepreneurial income and relief payments.

"The March advance in the index reflects largely the sharp rise in cash income from farm marketings and a marked expansion in unemployment insurance benefits, as industrial payrolls, corrected for seasonal variations, continued the slow decline that has been in progress since December of last year," the bureau said.

Ulster Rebuffs De Valera by Asking Draft

Struggle Feared Over British Conscription In Northern Ireland

By the United Press.

Dublin, April 27.—An inter-Irish struggle over Britain's intention of conscripting youths of northern Ireland for her army developed tonight after Prime Minister De Valera suddenly cancelled his Saturday sailing for the United States because of "grave events."

The New York-born premier of Eire, regarding the six northern Ulster countries as part of sovereign Ireland under Eire's new constitution, previously had warned that any attempted British conscription in the Ulster would lead to "great trouble."

Draft To Be Resisted

Every step will be taken, he said, to prevent Irishmen—whether in Eire or Ulster—from being forced to fight for a "foreign power."

De Valera was to sail for New York Saturday to open the Irish exhibit at the World's Fair on May 1, to visit President Roosevelt and tour through 21 States.

Indications that Britain's resort to military conscription affecting 20-year-old men of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland was responsible for the cancellation of De Valera's voyage were strengthened tonight by developments here and in Belfast.

In Belfast, Prime Minister Viscount Craigavon sent a message to British Prime Minister Chamberlain "requesting" him to apply the conscription to northern Ireland.

Takes Rap at De Valera

In an apparent rap at De Valera, Lord Craigavon said:

"The government of northern Ireland is a most loyal part of the United Kingdom and would deeply resent any suggestion that she should not be included in the military training bill . . . any alternative would be regarded as a slight . . . and would strike a blow at the attachment which the province bears to the crown and to the empire."

(In Scotland, the Glasgow Municipal Council sent to Chamberlain a protest against the conscription of Scottish youths.)

Turrou Urges Special FBI Squad To Run Down Spies

The man who broke the Nazi spy ring in New York City last year said yesterday his work there had "merely scratched the surface" of espionage now going on in the United States.

Leon G. Turrou, former ace Federal investigator, who left the FBI the day after a grand jury returned the spy indictments, told the Kiwanis Club that agents of foreign powers have been planted through men, to work under the FBI and in munitions plants and navy yards.

Turrou urged formation of a special squad of at least 50 trained men, to work under the FI and in co-operation with Army and Navy intelligence officers, in tracking down foreign spies.

"It may take a national calamity to emphasize the present danger," said Turrou.

Wallace Opposes Subsidies for Butter Exports

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Wallace said yesterday the Agriculture Department had been asked by the dairy industry to subsidize exports of surplus butter to bolster domestic prices.

The Secretary told his press conference he was opposed to the request which was made by officials of the National Co-operative Milk Producers Federation.

"If we are to pay a subsidy to move surplus butter into consumption, I believe our own consumers should receive the benefit," he said.

He explained that in the case of wheat and cotton, the United States was seeking through subsidies, to hold a "fair share" of world markets it had helped supply for many years.

"In the case of butter, we have sold very little abroad," he said. "To subsidize exports of butter would be to engage in dumping—a practice which the Administration opposes."

Liner Chartered To Bring British Rulers to America

London, April 27 (AP).—King George VI and Queen Elizabeth will sail for Canada and the United States next month aboard the German-built liner Empress of Australia instead of the swift battle cruiser Repulse because of European tension.

Prime Minister Chamberlain formally announced the change in the House of Commons. It was learned the King some time ago had suggested it because of the value of the Repulse on this side of the Atlantic.

The government chartered the liner for the royal party. She will carry no other passengers.

The Empress of Australia, Canadian Pacific liner of 21,833 tons, will sail from Portsmouth at 1:30 p. m. May 6. They will have far more room in the liner than in the specially built "royal apartments" aboard the Repulse, shipping experts said. They and their retinue of 30 persons will have all six passenger decks to themselves. The vessel has carried as many as 1,200 passengers. Her crew normally numbers 500.

Fear of Strife Over Draft in Ulster Keeps De Valera From U.S., Irish Envoy Reveals

Prime Minister Eamon De Valera called off his trip to the United States because he feared a "dangerous situation" might result if Great Britain tries to conscript men in six counties of northern Ireland, Robert Brennan, Irish Minister to the United States, said yesterday.

These six Ulster counties are a part of the United Kingdom, having been cut off from the 26 counties of the Irish Republic 20 years ago. They have their own subordinate parliament in Belfast, but the Irish to the south regard them as a part of the traditional Irish territory, and hope some day to regain them. Consequently, students here of the situation say, the "troubles" certainly will return to the Emerald Isle if the British attempt conscription on any part of it.

De Valera Disappointed

Minister Brennan, bombarded with telegrams and telephone calls after De Valera had announced cancellation of his trip because of "yesterday's grave event," took time to tell The Post:

"It is my belief that the Prime Minister was concerned over the threatened conscription, which would affect six Irish counties. He feared that a dangerous situation might result, and he didn't like to be absent on that account.

"I had word from the Department of External Affairs in Dublin that the Prime Minister was terribly disappointed, since he looked forward keenly to his American visit and was aware of plans to welcome him in 32 cities and 20 states.

"The Prime Minister is hoping that he may be able to come over in the fall."

The American-born Irish leader was to have arrived in this city May 7, and to have been President Roosevelt's guest at the White House. On the program were a dinner at the White House, a luncheon by Secretary of State Hull, an address before the Senate and House, visits to Mount Vernon, Catholic University and Georgetown University, a dinner by the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and a speech in Constitution Hall.

Excluded From Conscription

In passing a conscription act in 1916, the British Parliament excluded all of Ireland. In 1918, Lloyd George put through a bill extending the draft to that country. So determined were the Irish to resist it, however, according to those familiar with those days, that the act never was thoroughly enforced.

Many Irishmen joined the British army, however, and Irish historians say that, on a per capita basis, their mortality rate was the highest in the Allied forces.

What would be Ireland's attitude in the event of another great European war? A man familiar with sentiment in the Irish Republic answered that in this way:

"Ireland is not going into any war for England's sake. If she goes into any war, it will be for Ireland's sake, just as England does, just as France does."

Hull Disappointed

Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday expressed his personal disappointment, and the disappointment of the American people over the sudden cancellation of Prime Minister DeValera's trip.

Hull said he had not been informed of the reason for De Valera's abrupt change of plans. Minister Brennan, who had been in New York in connection with the World's Fair, did not return to Washington until late in the afternoon.

Camps Urged for Aliens Who Defy Deportation

The House Rules Committee yesterday approved a bill by Representative Hobbs (Democrat), of Alabama, authorizing detention of aliens who fail to leave the United States within 90 days after a deportation warrant is issued against them in special immigration stations.

Representatives Celler (Democrat), New York, and O'Day (Democrat), of New York, opposed it, with Miss O'Day predicting that approval of the bill would be "the first step" toward fascism in the United States.

Constant Reader

In "Guns of Burgoyne"—by Bruce Lancaster, the author has achieved the seemingly impossible, and found a fresh background for an American historical novel. Through the eyes of the main character, Kurt Ahrens, a young Hessian under the command of "Gentleman Johnny" Burgoyne, one sees the whole of the general's mismanaged campaign. One goes with him as his army, overloaded with parade ground equipment, starts on its march through dense forests, until it is defeated by those Colonial farmers who refused to stand in line to be properly shot down. Few novels of recent date have had as strong an appeal for masculine readers as this vigorous, exciting and satisfying tale.

Paris Urging Rumania Not To Fear Soviet

Bonnet Strives to Allay Misgivings as To Communist Aid

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 27.—French diplomatic negotiators labored tonight to bring Rumania and Soviet Russia together as allies in the British-French sponsored European alliance.

Sources close to the government said Foreign Minister Bonnet was striving to convince Grigore Gafencu, the visiting Rumanian foreign minister, that a military assistance accord with Russia would not bring with it the danger of a spread of communism in the Balkans.

The diplomatic maneuvering was speeded up in an effort to strengthen the French-British alliances on the eve of Chancellor Hitler's answer to the Roosevelt appeal for peace agreement.

Maisky Reaches Paris

Ivan Maisky, Soviet Ambassador to London, reached Paris from Copenhagen, where he said Russia would "assist Europe in case of aggression." Here he conferred with the Soviet envoy to France, Jakob Surits.

Maisky was not expected to see Bonnet since, a reliable informant said, Surits was conducting all negotiations for Russia with the French.

Maisky, at the Copenhagen stop on his way back to London from Moscow said:

"I return very content. Russia's position in a possible conflict is perfectly clear. We are going to assist Europe in case of aggression."

French "Calmly Waiting"

The Rumanian foreign minister saw Bonnet twice, and also visited Premier Daladier and President Lebrun. A communique on the results was expected Saturday.

Semi-official sources said, meanwhile, that the French government was "calmly awaiting developments" as to what Hitler may say tomorrow.

Frenchmen were interested vitally in whether Hitler would make any specific demands. If he makes precise references to Danzig or Rumania, French diplomats acknowledged, they will be greatly concerned.

If Hitler says "no" to Roosevelt's proposal for a non-aggression pact but adds general statements about "peace with justice," there will be a certain amount of relief, the French said.

Union Celebrants Told Fear Of War Is Worse Than in '61

The 117th anniversary of the birth of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant was observed yesterday with ceremonies at the Civil War hero's statue at Union Square. Seventy-five members of Civil War organizations participated. Commander John T. Ryan, of the Department of the Potomac, G. A. R., places wreath as Mary H. Holt, past president of Cushing Auxiliary, holds flag. Percy S. Parker, camp color guard, is at right

At ceremonies yesterday marking the 117th birthday of Ulysses S. Grant, 75 members of Civil War organizations heard that "the minds of people are far more strained today" by war talk than in 1861.

Before palm wreaths were laid on the Civil War general's statue in Union Square, Philip Meredith Allen, member of the commandery in chief of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, said "the President today has greater problems than in 1861."

Allen scored "control of world affairs from Moscow" and declared communism, being international in scope, was a greater threat than fascism.

The invocation was given by Faye Earle Palsgrove, of the Sons of Union Veterans.

Participating in the ceremonies, sponsored by the William B. Cushing Camp, No. 30, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, were the following organizations: Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, with its affiliates, Warren G. Harding and Abraham Lincoln Camps; Sons of the Union Veterans of the Civil War, Ellen Spencer Mussey Tent No. 1, Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War; Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of the Potomac, with five affiliates—U. S. Grant Circle No. 1, Gen. Beck Circle, Abraham Lincoln Circle, William B. McKinley Circle, Oldroyd Circle No. 5, the Woman's Relief Corps, and the Dames of the Loyal Legion.

Axis Staff Will Meet After Hitler's Speech

By James M. Minifie.

Special Cable to The Post.

Rome, April 27.—Chancellor Hitler's speech tomorrow will be followed by important talks between the chief of the German army general staff, Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, and the heads of the Italian fighting services, it was learned today.

The Italian undersecretary of war and chief of the general staff, Gen. Alberto Pariana, and Signor Thaon di Revel, finance minister, conferred with Premier Mussolini today at Rocco Della Caminate, Il Duce's country home.

eGn. von Brauchitach will arrive here on Saturday, and will call on King Victor Emmanuel and Signor Mussolini. He is expected to spend the week-end in Italy before proceeding to Libya for a five- day tour of inspection. He is due back in Rome for the Empire Day celebrations on May 9, and is expected to have talks with the undersecretaries of the army, navy and air force, before going north to inspect the naval base at Spezzia.

This visit follows up talks between Gen. Alberto Pariani and Gen. Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the high command of the German armed forces at Innesbruck just before the Albanian affair began, and the subsequent conversations between Marshall Hermann Wilhelm Goering, chief of the German air force with Italian air leaders at Rome.

The comparitively long visit which Gen. von Braunchitsch will make at Libya follows precedent as the Italian colony lying between Egypt and Tunisia seems to be of particular interest to German military men.

Britain's conscription, however, still holds the major interest among Italians. Press comment tonight revealed a marked difference of opinion, with some papers representing conscription as an attempt to intimidate the Axis powers. Others, however, and these were in the majority, maintained the attitude of academic and rather self-satisfied detachment that marked the earlier reaction here.

Conscription Wins Support Of Commons to 51, will be used to man Britain's anti-air raid guns, coast defenses and other home defense units.

Replacement Arranged

The ministry of labor arranged with employers for replacement of those among the 1,500,000 joining the colors.

About 3,500,000 men under 50 remained on the "reserved" list in Britain and about 7,250,000 between 18 and 50 were available for armed service.

Standing up against angry attacks in a House of Commons debate on the conscription decision, the prime minister said he was confident it had averted disaster.

"I do not want to give you the idea that war is imminent. I do not think that it is. I do think, however, that we are in a position in which a very little one way or another may decide whether war is going to come or not."

"Right to Change Mind"

Chamberlain struggled to beat down opposition and obtain Commons approval of army conscription before midnight—giving it the bold status of a direct warning to Adolf Hitler on the eve of the Fuehrer's speech Friday noon before the Reichstag.

Regarding his abrupt about-face from a March 29 promise to Commons that Britain never would have compulsory army service in peacetime, the Prime Minister argued that "every man has the right to change his mind" and that a month ago the threat of war did not appear as grave.

Other critics, including David Lloyd George and Winston Churchill, attacked him because of the "limited" provisions of the governments plan because only 20-year-old youths will be called up for a total of four years service.

Seeks to Avoid Election

"It would have been stupid to prefer to lead the country to disaster rather than take the decision announced yesterday," Chamberlain declared. He added that the decision had been greeted jubilantly by other peace-loving nations.

He warned that the government might be forced to call a general election if the opposition pushed too far the controversy over conscription. Chamberlain made it plain that he is determined to avoid a general election because it would leave the country in a state of uncertainty "in what might be vital weeks."

Maj. Clement R. Attlee, Laborite leader, opened the attack on the government with a motion calling for a vote of censure of the government—which, if approved, would have forced the resignation of the government.

Attlee asserted that Chamberlain had "not been a good friend of democracy," that Britain's previous system of voluntary military service had proved adequate to fill defense requirements and that Chamberlain had repudiated his own promise.

Similar opposition charges were being made simultaneously in a debate in the House of Lords, where Lord Snell said the government sought to make national service "obedience to the coercive rasping of a drill sergeant." Lord Samuel contended that 200,000 men for the armed service—the number expected to be obtained from the annual calling up of 310,000 after exemptions—could be obtained without compulsion. He recalled that 5,000,000 men volunteered throughout the empire for the World War.

Earl Stanhope, first lord of the admiralty, argued the government's case in the House of Lords with the assertion:

"What is the use of accumulating arms if we haven't the men to handle them?"

Supply Problem Cited

Attlee, contending there was no necessity for Britain to join all Europe in military conscription, said:

"We have under arms or in reserve 1,250,000 men, and this is rising to 1,500,000—this in addition to the tremendous army of volunteers for home defense."

Attlee said the supply problem—Britain's need of arms and materials—was greater than the man power problem, and that the government had delayed too long in creating a post of minister of supply in the cabinet.

He denied that the voluntary system of army service meant that Britain needed somebody else to fight her battles—referring to sarcastic assertions abroad that "Britain is ready to fight to the last French soldier."

Pittman Offers Bill to Let President Punish Japanese

By Robert C. Albright.

A joint resolution empowering the President to impose trade and other restrictions against Japan when America's nine-power treaty rights are violated in China yesterday was introduced in the Senate by Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Pittman said the resolution was designed as a deterrent against "unusual and careless war practices which constantly threaten the lives of our citizens in China."

It authorizes the President, with ten days' notice to Congress, to proclaim trade embargoes and credit restrictions on Japan when he finds that nation "is endangering the lives of our citizens or depriving them of their legal rights and privileges" in China.

Measure Called Answer

Indicating he would ask Senate action in advance of a final decision on neutrality act amendments, Pittman said the powers were needed to facilitate efforts by the President to bring about "abandonment of unnecessary and arbitrary interference with the lives and business interests of our citizens, and flagrant discrimination (by Japan) in China in favor of her own nationals with regard to trade, commerce and travel in China."

Pittman said the measure should provide an effective answer to the Japanese argument that the Nine-Power Pact is obsolete.

"At the present time, and for many months," he said, "the Japanese government in its conquest of China has been endangering the lives of our citizens and restricting them in their rights and privileges in violation of the Nine-Power Pact. Our Government has for months been protesting to Japan against these violations of the treaty without any success whatever."

Offered With Bill

The move was believed the first of a series to be made by Pittman to strengthen his pending "cash and carry" neutrality bill, which had been criticized as discriminating in favor of Japanese trade in the Pacific, and British-French trade in the Atlantic. Although not an amendment to his bill, it will be considered in conjunction with it.

The Foreign Relations Committee chairman said he was also considering an amendment to the shipping section of his neutrality measure, which would permit trade by American ships with British dominions and territories of other belligerents, if outside a war "danger zone."

Although eight other nations signed the Nine-Power Pact, including Belgium, Britain, China, France, Italy, Holland and Portugal, Pittman said his resolution "at this time" would apply to only one of the signatories—Japan—which he accused of violating the treaty's guarantees.

As he offered the resolution in the Senate, Acting Chairman Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee indicated State Department officials would be asked for their views on legislative treatment of the Sino-Japanese conflict. Numerous witnesses before both committees have urged embargoes on American shipments of scrap iron and other war materials to Japan, asking privilege treatment of China in any general cash and carry legislation.

The Pittman plan nonetheless was expected to meet sharp committee opposition from members of the so-called mandatory neutrality bloc who interpreted it as a step toward naming the aggressors in the event of a general war. Japan was not named as a treaty-violator in the resolution, but Pittman was more blunt in his interviews with the press.

Property damage in China was not listed as a cause of action by the President, the Senator pointing out that he had purposely included only danger to live and legal privileges. His measure provided that the President should act only after making "every reasonable effort to induce" compliance with the treaty.

Restrictions imposed by any Presidential proclamation could provide "embargoes upon the export and import of certain commodities, articles and materials, and . . . restrictions upon monetary exchange and credits, specifically limited and defined." Agricultural products would be exempted from the embargo. Ten days before the President issued such a proclamation, he would have to submit copies of it to both houses of Congress, "accompanied by a full report of the facts, evidence, and diplomatic correspondence bearing upon the necessity for his intended action."

Before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Prof. D. F. Fleming, of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., meanwhile declared "Japan's crime in China is worse than Germany's." He urged recall of the United States Ambassador to Japan, as well as the Ambassador to Germany, for indefinite consultation.

Across the Capitol, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee also continued hearings on proposed neutrality act changes. Dr. Thomas H. Healy, dean of Georgetown University foreign service school, recommended continuance of the present neutrality law, while Paul C. Wolman, legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, asked that American ships be permitted to carry goods to belligerents at their own risk.

"FROM THE LIFE AND VIGOR OF THE GRAIN"

M. P. Church Electing Two 'Unity' Bishops

Dr. James Straughn, Of Baltimore, Held Possibility

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 27.—Representatives of the Methodist Protestant Church met tonight to elect two bishops—their first since 1828.

Their action removed one of the wedges that have kept the Methodists of the United States divided into three churches for the major portion of a century.

Prominently mentioned for the bishops' posts were Dr. James H. Straughn, of Baltimore, president of the church's general conference; Dr. John Calvin Broomfield, Fairmont, W. Va., past president of the general conference; Dr. John W. Hawley, Pittsburgh, president of the board of missions; Dr. Gideon I. Humphrey, president of High Point College, High Point, N. C.; Dr. Frank W. Stephenson, Pittsburgh, executive secretary of the board of education of the church; Dr. Terry Lee Gibbs, Pittsburgh, executive secretary of the board of education's youth division.

Voting were the 100 Methodist Protestant delegates to the uniting conference which already is started on its work of establishing one united Methodist Church.

The new bishops will hold that rank in the new church along with 41 from the Methodist Episcopal Church and 19 from the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Of those, 12 of the Northern bishops and 7 from the South are retired.

After the current conference, new bishops will be selected as needed by the joint group rather than as representatives of the present divisions.

Foreign Policy Issue

As the 900 delegates and 80 bishops settled down to work out the intricate problems of church government, Chester A. Smith, lay delegate from New York, asked the conference to go on record as approving "the action of the President of the United States in his attempt to put the moral and economic strength of America upon the side of the world's democracies in their apparently belated decision to take a stand against the aggressions of the totalitarian states."

Parliamentary rules forced the resolution into committee without discussion but Smith asserted he would insist on action.

Referred to committee without disclosure of its contents was a letter from Bishop Collins Denny, of Richmond, Va., the only bishop of either church who has opposed union. A group of Southern Methodist laymen, which church leaders say represents only a small minority, already, has threatened legal action against unification.

tagious enthusiasm for the songs and dances which few professionals could achieve.

Romantic love songs and ballads dating from the days of the Spanish conquistadores were sung by New Mexican youths wearing the broad-brimmed hats and flaring trousers of their Spanish forefathers. Old France was represented by a group of pretty mademoiselles in peasant costume who performed such familiar French folk dances as "Sur le Pont d'Avignon."

"Campbells Are Coming"

Brawny Scotchmen in bright plaid kilts marched through the audience playing "The Campbells Are Coming" as the tune should be played—on bagpipes. Proceeding to the stage, they provided accompaniment for an intricate sword dance by a Scotch lassie.

A wide variety of other instruments was heard during the opening program. Lilting fiddle tunes by John D. Weaver, of Landrum, N. C.; amazing feats on the harmonica by Ira Russell, of West Durham, N. C.; a psaltery orchestra composed of small children from Sidwell Friends School, and many different types of fife and dulcimer, all delighted the audiences.

Prominent among the dance groups was one from Cheyenne Mountain School, Colorado Springs, Colo., which left spectators breathless by the precision and agility they displayed in their lively cowboy dances. English morris dancers, from Fairhope, Ala., and square dances by Tennessee mountaineers were equally well received.

Traditional Anglo-Saxon tunes and dance figures were presented by youngsters from Crossnore School in North Carolina. Hampton Institute students introduced creative dances based on such folk themes as the cakewalk.

Today's matinee and evening shows again will open with American Indian dances. Spanish-vaquero songs, miners' ballads, canal songs, Tennessee play party games, Vermont square dances, spirituals, fiddle tunes—all will contribute to a program which is expected to duplicate the success of yesterday's opening. As was the case yesterday, afternoon and evening shows will feature many of the same performers but the programs themselves will be different.

Seats are still available for the remaining National Folk Festival programs today and tomorrow. The ticket office at The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest, is open from 8 a. m. until midnight. Prices for the matinees range from 50 cents to $1; for the evening shows, from 50 cents to $2.

Tomorrow afternoon he will greet Crown Prince Olav of Norway and Crown Princess Martha, who will be his guests until Sunday morning.

When he returns from the Fair early Sunday evening he will welcome to Hyde Park Crown Prince Fredrik of Denmark and Crown Princess Ingrid. They are to stay 24 hours.

Mr. Roosevelt said today that both visits will be "just old-fashioned country ones."

In his proclamation, Mr. Roosevelt said the committee report to the Secretary of Labor "finds no good reasons that would support continuance of this prejudice" against persons over 40.

"In view of these considerations," he went on, "I should like to ask employers throughout the country to give special consideration to this problem of middle-aged workers, to review and examine their current policies in order to determine whether applicants who are over 40 years of age are being given a fair opportunity to qualify for jobs, and to study their various departments and processes with a view to seeing where the qualifications and abilities of these older applicants could be utilized. I want to urge social agencies, labor organizations, and the general public to join in giving this problem their earnest consideration."

The President noted improved business in the opening paragraph of the proclamation and used it to strengthen his appeal.

Fair Trade Bill To Raise Prices, Inquiry Told

Competition Would Be Stifled, House Committee Hears

Charges that the District fair trade bill will raise prices and stifle competition to the disadvantage of the consumer were made yesterday as hearings opened before a sub-committee of the House District Committee.

Only two witnesses were heard, but the session was enlivened with repartee between the opponents of the price-fixing measure and subcommittee members who favor it.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, grilled the witnesses—Miss Mildred Price, of the Women's Trade Union League, and O. M. Kile, Washington representative of Sears & Roebuck—as a packed committee room followed the cross examination intently.

Although the Kennedy bill is sponsored by the Retail Druggists Association, it was developed at the hearing that it would apply to all products sold on the retail market, including liquors. Retailers would be able to enter into agreements with manufacturers, stipulating the minimum sale price.

Called Price Dictators

The two witnesses asserted, moreover, that the retail dealers, rather than the manufacturers, are the price dictators in such bargains and are able to force reluctant producers into line.

Dirksen expressed the opinion that the 44 states who have enacted similar laws couldn't be wrong, but Kile responded that the legislatures didn't know what they were doing when they passed the acts.

Sponsors of the legislation, he said, have resorted to "deliberate misrepresentation" to bring about their enactment. Unless the trend is halted, he added, the public will have a new NRA thrust upon it without the protection of Government supervision.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Henry Gregor gives his second lecture-recital on Bach, Beethoven and Brahms in Phillips Memorial Gallery Thursday night. Program: Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B flat minor from "Das Wohltemperirte Clavier" and Brahms' "Fantasien," Op. 116.

Continuing the series of lecture-recitals which he began last week on the practically inexhaustible topic of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, Henry Gregor devoted most of his speaking time last evening to amplification of the statement that the three composers are linked not only in the order of artistic succession but also in their habit of developing themes through a process of logic analogous to the growth of an organism. His emphasis on this point was not misplaced in this period of experiment when many radical composers discar dthematic development as an old-fashioned bit of pedantry.

While agreeing with him on this significant characteristic of the three B's, one can take exception to his dictum that no one of them was in the slightest degree romantic. Logical development is not inconsistent with romantic feeling, for romanticism is not a particular style of writing, but a state of mind. It is only when romantimism is unchecked by reason that it becomes flamboyant and rhetorical. Still Mr. Gregor made an important distinction between the fruitful process of development and the purely romantic "endless melody" of Liszt and Wagner, and illustrated the difference by playing passages from Beethoven's "Hammerclavier" sonata, Liszt's A flat major "Liebestraum" and Wagner's "Liebestod."

Bach was represented on the program by the B flat minor prelude and fugue from "The Well-Tempered Clavichord," and Brahms by the "Fantasien," Op. 116. These seven pieces, thre capriccios and four intermezzi, are seldom heard either in succession or in solitary state, and only one of them, the seventh, can be found on a gramophone record. The opportunity of listening to them all in one evening, with Mr. Gregor's apt comments, provided a satisfying experience.

A large and attentive audience must have gained among other rewards a perception of what music means to a musician. Mr. Gregor does not strive either for eloquence in his spoken words or for virtuosity in his playing. His informal remarks, however, revealed an intuitive knowledge of musical thought, as his playing disclosed sensitive qualities of interpretation.

Families Indemnified For Jail Fire Deaths

Tallahassee, Fla., April 27 (U.P.).—Florida's Legislature today voted $8,500 to families of three men "willfully and brutally" murdered November 28, 1932, when the jail at Cedar Key, Fla., in which they weer being held, was set afire.

T. W. Brewer, justice of the peace, and Thomas Booth, special constable, were convicted of murder in the slaying and sentenced to life imprisonment.

U. S. and Warrings Discuss Deal to Settle Tax Bill abandoned the numbers racket, their sole source of income.

Warring

The Government's policy has been to settle tax claims for the most it could get, when convinced that settlement would yield more than could be collected by filing suit.

The tax claim may be settled before the end of the trial of Emmitt Warring for criminal conspiracy to defraud the Treasury of the disputed taxes, it was indicated yesterday. His trial dragged through its fourth day yesterday, with Tax Agent William H. F. Swain on the stand all day.

Defense Counsel F. Joseph Donohue and Myron G. Ehrlich cross-examined Swain on Emmitt Warring's co-operation with the tax investigation. District Attorney Pine and Assistant District Attorney Wilson meanwhile grimly resumed knitting their evidence together.

Leo Paul Warring, Charles (Rags) Warring and Gordon L. R. Sadur were indicted with Emmitt for conspiracy but were given separate trials. Their lawyers, Leo A. Rover and Irvin Goldstein, joined the others in the case in a conference with Justice Laws.

The justice recessed court for 15 minutes as soon as it convened, telling the jurors the conference might expedite the trial. Other negotiations were conducted at intervals yesterday.

An announcement of the settlement may be made this morning.

ciple of the legislative formula, but added that "allocations should be made on the basis of jobs to be provided and not on the local basis of funds to be distributed."

This method, almost identical with that proposed by Senator Lodge (Republican), of Massachusetts, was beaten down in the Byrnes committee by the preponderance of Democratic votes. The President further disagreed with the Byrnes bill in his rejection of the requirement that State and local sponsors of WPA projects guarantee a fixed percentage of the total expenditure within each State.

Republicans on both sides of the Capitol were exuberant over the President's acceptance of the principle that relief funds be distributed in terms of jobs instead of money.

"I'm gratified that the President should pay such close attention to the wishes of the minority," observed Senator Lodge.

House Minority Leader Martin laughingly remarked, "I hear the President has gone Republican."

In addition to the $1,477,000,000 appropriation for WPA, the President asked $123,000,000 each for the National Youth Administration and the Farm Security Administration. Lauding the work of the NYA, he asked that it be established as a separate agency, independent of the WPA. Under the reorganization plan announced early this week, the NYA would become one division of the projected Federal Welfare Agency, while the WPA would be incorporated in the proposed Federal Works Agency.

Principle Denounced

Denouncing the principle of direct relief to the able-bodied unemployed, the President said that although "the cost per individual of a work program is higher than that of a dole . . . the adoption of a dole as the solution of this problem would be disastrous."

Jabbing at "those who talk glibly and without much information about cutting the cost of relief," the President challenged "any one of these critics (to) undertake the job of administration himself."

"It will be said by history, after much political smoke has been cleared away," he predicted, "that the Federal Government's handling of work relief has been one of our most efficient administrative accomplishments."

A major point of the Byrnes bill found the President's emphatic support: retention of Federal control over relief administration. In flat opposition to the views of Senators Vandenberg, Taft and other Republicans as well as some Democrats, President Roosevelt denounced "proposals for handling unemployment relief through a system of grants of Federal funds to States with various matching requirements." He asserted that "such a system has as many disadvantages as there are local political units in the nation."

Backs White Collar Men

The message expressed insistence on continuation of white-collar projects in the WPA.

"I wish to state with emphasis," he said, "since the opposition view is frequently expressed, that the program of the Works Progress Administration should, as at present, include some projects of the nonconstruction type to meet the needs of those unemployed workers whose training is such that they are not adapted to employment on construction projects."

The President gave his "hearty indorsement" to a bill that recently passed the Senate, forbidding political activity on the part of persons connected with the work relief program. However, he said these anti-political provisions "would be more constructive and their enforcement would be simpler," if Congress would place the administrative employes of WPA and other relief agencies within the classified civil service.

Barkley Comments

Majority Leader Barkley asserted that the relief message was "very comprehensive and constructive." He added that the President's reorganization plan had "very largely dissipated the necessity for a long-winded argument over the WPA."

Speaker Bankhead said the amount requested was less than expected, while Senator Adams, of Colorado, one of the leaders of the democratic economy bloc, observed that "it isn't a bad figure." Adams objected to the President's willingness to take relative population into consideration in allocating relief funds to the States. "The allotment should be simply on the basis of need," he said.

Cologne Reports Nazi Troops Mass

London (Friday), April 28 (INS).—Massing of German troops and war materials near the Belgian and Netherlands frontiers was reported today in a dispatch from Cologne to the Daily Telegraph.

Heavy concentrations of military personnel and artillery were observed in the Cologne area for the last two days, the dispatch said. The main concentrations, it was added, were believed to be in areas opposite Belgium's German-populated provinces of Eupen and Malmedy.

Suspect Grilled In 3 Kidnapings

Bridgeport, Conn., April 27 (INS).—An eight-State police teletype broadcast tonight revealed that William Jernigan, 31, in jail here as a vagrant, was being questioned by State and Federal authorities in connection with the kidnap murders of Peter Levine, Mary Imelda Coyle and Charles Fletcher Mattson.

Jernigan, arrested in Ridgefield, Conn., late Tuesday, claims to be the son of a well-to-do Jackson, N. C., physician, the holder of an A. B. degree from Northwestern University and a newspaper man who has worked in the country's principal cities from coast to coast.

Text of President's Message on Relief Funds

The text of President Roosevelt's message to Congress on relief needs follows:

Six years ago, this Nation was confronted with a situation calling for rapid and decisive action. Millions of workers were already jobless; their number was increasing, and the economic structure was threatened with collapse. In this crisis, the vast reserves of the Federal Government were promptly made available, and emergency assistance was provided for all classes of the population who were in distress.

Since that time we have moved along a broad front to make permanent provision to meet various phases of the problem of unemployment and need. The social security act provides aid for the aged, the blind and for dependent children. Unemployment compensation, intended to tide workers over from one job to another, furnishes protection against short term employment of the intermittent variety. Public works have employed many persons.

But there has been, and still is, a vast number of unemployed workers for whom some other protection must be provided.

It is very important to remember that the fundamental decision which was made in connection with the problem of providing for the needy able-bodied unemployed was whether provision should be made through the medium of work or a dole. I have on numerous occasions expressed my conviction that the proper solution was work, but I desire to take this opportunity to reaffirm my conviction in that regard.

Cost Higher Than Dole

In fact for six years it has been the definite national policy to give work to the needy unemployed who are able to work instead of handing out charity to them in the form of food.

It is admitted that the cost per individual of a work program is higher than that of a dole. However, I firmly believe that the advantages which accrue from the maintenance of the morale and self respect of the worker and the creation of permanent public assets fully justify this increased cost, and that the adoption of the dole as the solution of this problem would be disastrous.

When those who talk glibly and without much information about cutting the cost of relief are pinned down, to facts, they are obliged to admit that they can offer only two alternative plans—to cut down the number of needy persons receiving relief or to cut the per capita work payments, or in other words, make a definite beginning toward the substitution of a dole for work.

It is these same individuals who, picking out a handful of instances in the administration of a huge undertaking, seek to delude the people of this country into the belief that the minor exception is the rule. Let any one of these critics undertake the job of administration himself. That is a challenge which will be avoided but not answered.

There is wide discussion at the present time of various proposals for handling unemployment relief through a system of grants of Federal funds to States with various matching requirements. I believe that such a system has as many disadvantages as there are local political units in the Nation. If grants to States are used for direct relief, we have all the disadvantageous features of the dole which I have previously described. If, on the other hand, such grants are to be used to finance locally conducted work programs, inefficiency and confusion through lack of co-ordination and uniformity are bound to result. Under either the dole or local work programs the administrative cost will inevitably be much larger than under a federally operated work program.

Stresses Evil

Furthermore, I am of the opinion that the adoption of a system of direct grants of Federal funds to States would result in the creation of pressure groups striving to increase the amount of such grants, which would bring about a demand for increased appropriations which both the present Congress and future Congresses would find it extremely difficult to resist.

In my message of April 14, 1938, I recommended to the Congress a series of measures designed to check the deflationary processes and the failure of consumers' demand which were occurring at that time. Since the adoption by the Congress of the recovery program outlined in that message, the index of industrial production has increased more than one-quarter. The National income, which amounted to $62,000,000,000 in 1938, is now running at a rate which should increase it to $67,000,000,000 in 1939. This I regard as all-important, because, as stated in my message of last April, I believe that if the national income can be increased to $80,000,000,000 our whole economic picture will greatly improve and the problem of unemployment will become much less acute. However, I wish to repeat what I said at that time: I do not believe that this increase in national income can be brought about solely by the expenditure of public funds for relief and recovery purposes.

From the standpoint of private employment, the economic situation has greatly improved. Employment declined steadily and drastically from 1929 to 1932. Improvement began in 1933, and by the early fall of 1937 almost 10,000,000 more persons had jobs than were employed during the month when this Administration took office. Average nonagricultural employment during 1937 was within 1,000,000 of the annual average for 1929. After a temporary setback last year, we are now regaining the lost ground. There is every reason to believe that average employment during 1939 will be well in excess of that for 1938. I wish to stress the point that when the situation is viewed in terms of employment, the losses sustained from 1929 to 1932 had practically been wiped out by 1937.

Idle Roll Still Large

We have found, however, that in spite of substantial recovery as indicated by the amount of employment, the volume of unemployment continues at high levels. This is due in large measure to two factors. The first of these is that the net increase in the labor supply, due to the growth of the working population, is in excess of 500,000 workers annually.

The second prime factor in this picture is the increasing output of the individual worker. At the recovery peak in 1937, when industrial production was at approximately the 1929 level, there were still about 8,000,000 unemployed. From this and subsequent experience, it is apparent that comparatively high levels of production mean substantially less employment than formerly.

In any consideration of the problem of unemployment relief it must be borne in mind that the program adopted to meet it must be envisioned to extend over a considerable period of time. The reason for this is that this Nation, in common with the entire world, is undergoing a process of readjustment, particularly in connection with the production and distribution of goods. Until our economic machinery can be realigned to meet present-day conditions the problem of unemployment will persist and the measures adopted to deal with it must, therefore, be carefully thought out and their operation planned to extend well into the future.

In determining the numbers of persons for whom work on a Federal program should be provided, it is necessary to consider the number of needy able-bodied unemployed. The total unemployment estimates for the nation run to very large totals, but it must be remembered that these totals cover all persons who desire a job and include many who do not actually have to have a job. In other words, there are in all the unemployment estimates large numbers of persons who can sustain themselves either by reason of private resources or because they can be supported within the family group to which they belong. It is, of course, to be desired that industry should expand to such a degree as to provide employment for all who desire it, but in meeting the problem of need within the limits of the funds which can reasonably be made available for the purpose, the emphasis must necessarily be placed upon the number of unemployed individuals who are actually in need of wages in order to secure the necessities of life.

3,000,000 on WPA

For the current fiscal year, the Congress has provided for the Works Progress Administration appropriations totaling approximately $2,250,000,000. With these funds the Works Progress Administration has provided employment for a maximum of 3,350,000 persons and is currently employing approximately 2,800,000. The average employment provided for the fiscal year will be approximately 3,000,000 persons.

In my budget message of January 3, 1939, I stated that "supplemental estimates of appropriations will be submitted to meet the requirements of the Works Progress Administration, the National Youth Administration and the Farm Security Administration for the fiscal year 1940," and that $1,750,000,000 was the amount estimated for expenditure by these three agencies. I feel that this amount plus such balances of the appropriation for the current year as remain unobligated on June 30, 1939, should cover not only all obligations to be incurred by these agencies during the fiscal year 1940 but the necessary administrative expenses connected therewith which may be incurred by the General Accounting Office, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the Treasury, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, including compensation payments.

For the fiscal year 1940, I recommend, therefore, that the specific sum of $1,477,000,000 be provided for the Works Progress Administration together with any balances of the appropriation for the current year which may remain unobligated on June 30, 1939. This represents a reduction of one-third below the amount provided in the current fiscal year and will permit the employment of slightly more than an average of 2,000,000 persons during the 12 months beginning July 1, 1939. Barring unforeseen and unpredictable developments, we are justified in expecting an upward trend in the volume of employment between now and June 30, 1940, and the sum just named represents my judgment as to the amount that should be provided on the basis of that expectation.

Stimulates Business

After a review of the accomplishments of jobless workers employed on Works Progress Administration projects, I am impressed with what can be achieved through a program that not only provides jobs for distressed workers, but also stimulates purchasing power and tends to induce further recovery. I commend to your attention the miles of roads and streets that have been built, the number of bridges and public buildings that have been constructed, and the worthwhile accomplishments in the fields of education, recreation, sanitation and health, and conservation and flood control. Notwithstanding these accomplishments there is a vast amount of worthwhile work remaining to be done. Expenditures in these fields represent permanent, tangible additions to our national wealth.

It is my opinion that the operations of the Works Progress Administration during the next fiscal year should be carried on much as at present, but with the reduction that will be possible because of expected increases in private employment and a consequent decline in the need for work relief. Organizational changes which I expect to be made under the authority granted in the recent reorganization act will, I anticipate, make possible important economies resulting from the co-ordination of the operations of various Federal agencies which are engaged in the carrying out of projects.

I wish to state with emphasis, since the opposite view is frequently expressed, that the program of the Works Progress Administration should, as at present, include some projects of the nonconstruction type to meet the needs of those unemployed workers whose training is such that they are not adapted to employment on construction projects. The provision of work for those people at occupations which will conserve their skills is of prime importance, and the emphasis placed upon construction projects should not obscure the necessity for this portion of the program.

A committee of the House of Representatives, under the authority of an enabling resolution, is now conducting an investigation of the Works Progress Administration. I sincerely hope that this investigation will be guided along constructive lines, and if this is done, I fell sure that its outcome will be to demonstrate the wisdom of the measures which have been adopted to meet the needs of the unemployed. In discussions of the projects of the Works Progress Administration there is a tendency to enlarge upon criticism of a few isolated projects to an extent which obscures the real character and value of the program as a whole. In an undertaking of this size there are inevitably individual instances which may be subject to criticism, but when the criticism of a very small fraction of the work being carried on is magnified to such an extent as to obscure the great good that is being achieved on the whole, all sense of proportion and relative value is lost.

In my message to the Congress of January 5, 1939, I suggested that a study be made of the methods by which funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration should be distributed. Any formula that may be devised for this purpose and written into legislation should take in account not only the factor of population, but also the constantly changing economic and unemployment conditions in various sections of the country. Allocations should be made on the basis of jobs to be provided and not on the local basis of funds to be distributed. Furthermore, the formula should not be too rigid and should permit a substantial amount of administrative discretion in order to provide sufficient flexibility to meet special situations and relief crises.

The matter of the contributions of sponsors to Works Progress Administration projects has been satisfactorily covered by the provisions of the emergency relief appropriation act of 1938, which placed a limit upon the amount of federal funds that can be used for purposes other than the payment of wages. I suggest a continuation of this practice rather than the imposition of a percentage basis on which sponsors would be required to participate. With an appropriation made available for an entire fiscal year, negotiations with sponsors can be conducted upon a much more satisfactory basis, and it can be confidently expected that the proportion of sponsors' contributions will be appreciably increased. The complications which have arisen during the current fiscal year from the fact that three separate appropriations have been made to finance the operations of the Works Progress Administration have militated against efficiency of operation and made it difficult to secure the fullest financial participation of sponsors on projects.

Cites NYA Progress

The Congress has recently made provisions against improper political activity on the part of persons connected with the work relief program—provisions affecting not only Federal employees, but all persons who may be in a position to bring improper pressure to bear, such legislation was recommended in my message of January 5, 1939, and has my hearty endorsement. However, in so far as the administrative employes of the Works Progress Administration and of the other agencies connected with the work relief program are concerned, I believe that the political provisions just mentioned would be more constructive, and their enforcement would be simpler, if the Congress would place such employes within the classified civil service.

The greatest single resource of this country is its youth, and no progressive government can afford to ignore the needs of its future citizens for adequate schooling and for that useful work which establishes them as a part of its economy. To ignore this need is to undermine the very basis of democracy which requires the constant renewal of its vitality through the absorption of its young people.

The National Youth Administration, as an entity now within the Works Progress Administration, has during the past four years developed a program which has proved its effectiveness in meeting this need. Its program is primarily one of work: work to enable needy students to secure an education, and work to enable unemployed needy young people who are out of school to make use of their capacities for public benefit and so in turn to earn a wage and acquire that work experience so essential to future effective employment. The National Youth Administration has supplemented its work program with other services directed toward increasing the effectiveness of young people as workers and securing their placement in regular employment.

Youth Needs Different

It is my belief that we should now give official recognition to the fact that the needs of youth are different from those of unemployed older workers. I further believe that, based on the demonstrated ability of its program to meet these needs at low cost, and our knowledge of the wide and still unmet need among young people for its services, Congress should provide for an expansion of its activities.

For the National Youth Administration I am requesting an appropriation of $123,000,000, for the fiscal year 1940 together with the unobligated balances on June 30, 1939, of the appropriation to that administration for the current fiscal year.

I am requesting further that the National Youth Administration be established as a separate agency to continue and expand its program for assisting needy young people. This will not increase existing overhead.

While the amount which I am recommending will not meet all the needs of all our young people, it will mean that education, training, work experience, and help toward private employment can be extended to many needy young people who are now eagerly waiting to take their place in our society as responsible workers and citizens.

Poor Farmers Aided

It has been the function of the Farm Security Administration to provide assistance for hundreds of thousands of destitute and low income farm families through supervised loans and guidance in sound farming practices, through adjustment of farmers' debts, and, where necessary, by direct subsistence grants. This program has kept thousands of farmers off relief and has enabled them, largely through their own efforts, to become self-supporting American citizens and to assume their rightful place in rural life. Aside from the further development of camps for migratory farm laborers, construction under the resettlement program will have been completed by the close of the current fiscal year, although in a few instances it may be necessary to provide funds for land development work.

For the foregoing activities of the Farm Security Administration, I recommend an appropriation of $123,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940, together with such balances of the current appropriation as may remain unobligated on June 30, 1939.

Owing to the language of the emergency relief appropriation acts, for the last two years it has been necessary to use funds allocated to or appropriated to the Department of Agriculture to provide for relief for Indians which come under jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. I feel that it would be preferable to have these funds appropriated directly to the department primarily responsible for the welfare of the Indians.

In view of the foregoing, I recommend an appropriation of $1,350,000 for the Indian Service for the fiscal year 1940 to be available for the continuation of Indian rehabilitation and relief projects, including necessary administrative expenses.

Recommendations Listed

For the following agencies for administrative expenses incident to carrying out the purposes for which the foregoing appropriations have been requested I recommend the amounts indicated:

(1) Civil Aeronautics Authority	$280,000
(2) General Accounting Office	5,225,000
(3) Treasury Department:
(A) Procurement division	3,300,000
(B) Division of disbursements	3,500,000
(C) Office of the treasurer	675,000
(D) Secret Service	350,000
(E) Division of accounts and deposits	6,000,000
(F) Public Health Service	300,000
Total Treasury	814,925,000
(4) U. S. Employes' Compensation Commission	5,250,000

The funds recommended for appropriation to the United States Employes' Compensation Commission are sufficient to provide for the reimbursement of Federal hospitals for hospitalization of persons paid from relief appropriations in the same manner as they are now reimbursed for the hospitalization of other Federal employes paid from regular appropriations. I feel that the necessary authority to make such payments should be included in this year's legislation.

I request also that in connection with the foregoing appropriations, as in the past, provision be made to continue the work of the National Emergency Council, the National Resources Committee, and the Rural Rehabilitation Program of the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration. For this purpose I recommend the following appropriations for the fiscal year 1940:

(1) National Emergency Council, $1,500,000.

(2) National Resources Committee, $990,000.

(3) Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, $10,000,000.

In order that the agencies concerned may have an opportunity to formulate definite plans for the next fiscal year it is desirable that the necessary legislation be enacted at as early a date as possible and that the funds be made available on the passage of this legislation.

It may be of interest to the Congress to know that through the Department of State we have received many assertions that there are few unemployed persons in the nations which have accepted totalitarian forms of government.

Called Relief in U. S.

In those nations private employment takes care of a smaller proportion of their employable citizens than private employment does in the United States.

This means that government employment is responsible for the care of a larger portion of the employable population than in this country— creating in fact a government employment system, based in great part on the manufacture of munitions, which costs far more than our system.

The principal difference is that in the nations to which I refer, this employment is called employment, whereas in the United States it is called relief.

Actually, our system of work relief is relatively far cheaper than the other method and as at present constituted does take care of the great majority of the needy unemployed who are able to work.

I trust that the people will not be deceived by the terminology and will not assume that the totalitarian methods of government are more effective than our own.

The system which we have favored in the United States during the past six years is by no means perfect. It can be improved, but not at the expense of substituting the dole for work relief nor by turning the management of works projects back to the sole care of the many thousands of local governments. It will be said by history, after much political smoke has cleared away, that the Federal Government's handling of work relief has been one of our most efficient administrative accomplishments.

Committee Reports Merit Plan Extension Bill

take the lead in a move to sabotage it, disgruntled Democrats may lend a hand.

As Republican members scoffed, Ramspeck estimated that 10 to 15 per cent of the 200,000 who would be eligible for civil service under his bill will fail the non-competitive tests and thus lose their jobs. That would mean 20,000 to 30,000.

His forecast, he said, was based on the experience of the Farm Credit Administration.

The bill was reported out by a vote of 11 to 8, with one Democrat joining the five Republicans in opposition. Chairman Ramspeck said he probably will ask for a special rule to bring the bill on the floor.

Hinting that the Republicans may file a minority report, Representative Rogers (Republican), of Massachusetts, called the bill "a farce" and "no merit bill at all."

Mrs. Rogers said that even civil service employes object to the bill because it will permit the President to "blanket" in large blocs of Federal workers with non-competitive tests that will be little more than verbal examinations.

Ramspeck retorted that Republican Presidents in the past blanketed Government workers into civil service without so much as a noncompetitive examination.

"The only time that competitive examinations have been held to bring a governmental unit into civil service," he said, "was when President Coolidge extended the merit system to the prohibition bureau.

"This bureau was in such bad shape, with many of the employes having criminal records, that the Administration passed the buck to the Civil Service Commission to clean them out."

The Republicans now, he added, are objecting to the civil service extension because they don't want to see Democrats entrenched in Government jobs. If open competitive examinations were held, he said, several million tests would have to be conducted at great expense to the Government.

President Roosevelt, in commenting on congressional efforts to halt improper political activity in relief, pointed out that such legislation had his hearty indorsement.

"However, in so far as the administrative employes of the Works Progress Administration and of the other agencies connected with the work relief program are concerned," he said, "I believe that the political provisions just mentioned would be more constructive, and their enforcement would be simpler, if the Congress would place such employes within the classified civil service."

Although largely ignored in the bi-partisan fight over civil service, the largest part of the Ramspeck bill authorizes the President to extend the classification act of 1923 to any agencies not now covered.

This will mean pay increases for thousands of employes in the field, if the measure becomes a law and the President acts and Congress appropriates the money, but no one on the committee knows just how many will benefit or how much it will cost the Government.

Some governmental departments like the Veterans Administration already have extended the higher pay scale to the field services, Ramspeck said, but most of them pay lower salaries in the field than in the administrative headquarters in Washington.

While the House Civil Service Committee argued over the Ramspeck bill, a sub-committee of the Senate Civil Service Committee listened to complaints that many governmental agencies are ignoring the smaller night law schools in the appointment of attorneys to Federal jobs.

During a hearing on a bill sponsored by Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, to prohibit such discrimination, Dean John R. Fitzpatrick, of Columbus University, accused Mastin G. White, Agriculture Department solicitor, of stating that he would not consider appointing a graduate from a law school not approved by the American Bar Association.

Dr. Fitzpatrick read a letter from John L. Lewis, C. I. O. head, asserting that the Federal Government's growing habit of hiring graduates of Yale, Harvard, or Columbia constitutes "a vicious practice."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, joined with Lewis in support of the measure as did former Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers; Charles Stengle, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, and Emory D. Smith, of the National Bar Association.

Senator Neely (Democrat), West Virginia, who conducted the hearing, remarked that he would be in favor of withholding appropriations for the salary of any Government official who discriminated against a law school in hiring attorneys. A favorable report on the bill to the full committee was expected.

Montgomery Asks Bids on School Bonds

Estimates Will Be Opened May 9 on $322,000 Issue

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. Telephone: Silverbard 4300.

Bids for Montgomery County bonds totaling $322,000 for school construction were asked in a resolution adopted yesterday by the Montgomery County Commissioners at their meeting in Rockville. The bids were asked for purchase at private sale on a basis of interest rate and are to be opened May 9 at 10 a. m. at the office of the board in Rockville.

The bonds must be sold before June 1 because of the terms in the act authorizing the sale, which requires that all of the issue, originally $724,000, be sold before that date.

The former board sold bonds totaling $230,000 in collaboration with a PWA grant for several of the most urgently needed projects and the grant left a balance of $172,000. The original bill was amended to make mandatory only the $322,000 bond issue sale but permitting a further issue of $172,000 at a later date.

The commissioners awarded a contract for surfacing Dorset avenue, Somerset, to Corson & Gruman, of Washington. The surfacing is to be with bituminous material at a cost of $3,759. The board also awarded an issue of $84,000 in certificates of indebtedness to the R. Roderick Shehyn & Co., of Washington, which bid the lowest interest rate of 1.89 on the issue.

The board approved a $50,000 bond surety for county funds for John B. Diamond, of Gaithersburg, who assumes the office of county treasurer May 2. The State bond has not arrived from the comptroller's office as yet for approval by the board.

Orchardist Makes Comeback After 'The Bottom Drops Out'

MALVERN VANCE STEDMAN

Malvern Vance Stedman Was President Of Eight Corporations; at 75 He Makes Living in Insurance

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

What would you do if——

You were a prosperous businessman, organizer and incorporator of thousands of acres in orchards and the president of eight corporations, then suddenly the bottom dropped out?

White-haired Malvern Vance Stedman set out to make good in a new business—life insurance.

A Virginian who knew Mr. Stedman at the height of prosperity wrote in the story of plucky recovery from financial ruin. Mr. Stedman only confirmed the account.

Today, at 75, he is a representative for one of the large life insurance companies—not a door-to-door canvasser but a salesman who calls on prospects and policy holders only by appointment. Far different is his daily routine from the days when he could write out a check for $10,000, but he is happy.

"My wife deserves all the credit for the new start I've made," he says. "In fact, a good wife is the best insurance policy a man can have."

Born in Florida, Mr. Stedman made—and lost—his fortune in southern Virginia. His mistake, he reckons, was that he bought up too much land.

As recently as ten years ago policy salesmen were ducked and insulted, but now they are treated with dignity and respect, according to Mr. Stedman.

Mr. and Mrs. Stedman live at 515 B street northeast.

Alexandria Man Seized in Numbers Case

Released on $1,500 Bond for Hearing On Monday

Michael O'Harrison, 38, giving his address as 232 West Glebe road, was arrested yesterday in the 400 block of South Lee street by Detective Russell Hawes and Policeman James W. Baber on a numbers charge. He was released on $1,500 bond for appearance in police court Monday.

Police Judge James Reece Duncan recently has been more or less "cracking down" on numbers cases, last week assessing fines of $500 against Nicholas La Fragiola and Irene Knott, with jail sentences added, and $300 against Dorothy Knott, all of whom noted appeals to Corporation Court. In the same case Mrs. L. E. Carr was fined $50 for possession of numbers slips. The others were charged with operating a numbers game.

Judge Duncan said only small cases are being heard in police court while the interior of the courtroom is being painted and court sessions are held in an adjoining office room.

Institute Opens Today

A Vacation Church School Institute will be held today in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 100 block of South Washington street, starting at 2:30 p. m. and again at 8 p. m.

The Rev. Charles A. York, extension secretary of the Baltimore Conference Board of Christian Education, and Miss Martha Bennet, recently appointed director of childrens' work, will be in charge of the institute. Local teachers and parents are especially invited.

Juveniles Discussed

Judge James Reece Duncan spoke at the meeting last night of the Alexandria Council of Social Agencies in Lee Camp Hall. His talk was on the trends of juvenile courts toward socializing terminology and procedure, broadening their jurisdiction and adding to their responsibilities in the field of work with children. He stated the place the juvenile court should occupy among community agencies is one of the most important. He also stated the juvenile court is the legal instrument through which is exercised the parental authority and power of the State to protect and restrain children whose parents or guardians are nonexistent or incompetent.

$50 Gift Announced

Mrs. William T. Burch, president, and Mrs. Doris Tompkins, secretary, of the Alexandria Tuberculosis Association, announced yesterday the Alexandria Lions Club has given the association $50 to be applied toward X-ray examinations of pupils from the colored schools of the city.

The tuberculosis society last Monday gave the X-ray test to 760 persons at the city health office and the George Washington High School, for a fee of $1 per person, and in instances where the patient was unable to pay the fee the association assumed the debt. Mrs. Tompkins said careful estimates fix the amount to be paid by the group at $252, and any donations made will assist in follow-up work of those examined.

The date for the first outdoor concert was set for May 24. It is planned to have the new bandstand erected on Lawton street by that time. Harold Erwin, W. A. Fravel and Albert Lester were named to secure talent to supplement the band at these concerts.

Concert Tonight

Falls Church.—Glenn Carew, Washington pianist, composer and radio artist, will give a concert tonight in Madison auditorium, under auspices of the choir of the Southern Methodist Church.

Consumers Gullible, Says Educator

Givens Tells Closing Session of Red Cross They Need Teaching

Americans are well educated as producers but sadly lacking in consumer knowledge, Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Education Association, declared yesterday at the closing session of the National Red Cross convention.

"Foolish spending which yields no enduring satisfaction or advantages, general gullibility and thriftlessness gambling agains odds which can be stated only in astronomical terms—these undermine economic security and efficiency at all income levels and among all sorts of people," he said.

Terming consumer education "a universal need for both men and women," Givens asserted that training in expenditures of time and money should be provided in schools and "not left to accidental learning."

Indorse Last Year's Stand

Learning, he declared, is never "fully consummated until it makes a difference in the practical conduct of one's life."

Delegates to the four-day meeting yesterday indorsed action taken by the International Red Cross Conference last year in condemning civilian destruction during war.

Zones of immunity from air raids were asked "in the name of humanity." These sections, according to their proposal, would be under Red Cross protection.

D. C. Waives Claim

The three flags of honor awarded annually to States in various population groups making the best showing in Red Cross membership drives went to Ohio, Connecticut and Nevada.

Mrs. August Belmont made the presentations and announced that the District of Columbia, with a Red Cross membership of 20.83 per cent of its population, had waived its claim to the flag in favor of Nevada.

Nevada's membership percentage of 9.96 is the greatest in the country, when the District is excepted. Attorney General Gray Mashburn of Carson City accepted the Nevada flag. Mrs. Fred Orr, of Youngstown, and Mrs. E. G. Buckland, of New Haven, accepted for Ohio and Connecticut, respectively.

Speakers at the final luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel were Adam S. Bennion, chairman of the Salt Lake County Chapter of Red Cross, Utah; the Rev. Emmett McLoughlin, of Arizona, and Fulton Lewis, jr., Washington radio news commentator.

German Waiter Arrested Here on Smuggling Charge

A 31-year-old substitute waiter at a downtown hotel was held under $5,000 bail for hearing May 11, when he was arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage yesterday on a charge of selling valuables which were smuggled into this country.

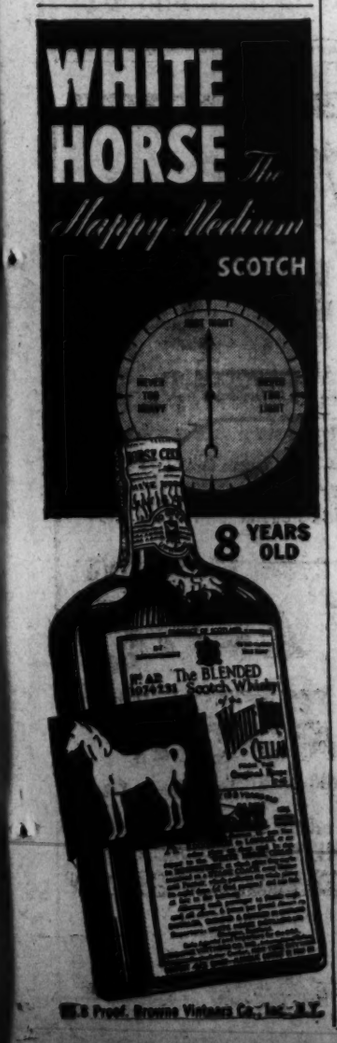
The defendant, Hellmuth Paul Schoenfeldt, who was born in Germany, pleaded not guilty. He gave his address as 2021 O street northwest.

Agents James W. Edmonston and K. A. Marr said the man had sold eleven sets of Dresden figurines worth $600 to prominent persons.

The investigators said Schoenfeldt told them he was a wealthy man in Germany, but was not allowed by the Nazi regime to bring any of his money out of the country.

Church Worker to Talk

Frank Rowley, delegate to the World Conference of Christian Youth in Holland in July and director of student work at Trinity Church, Morgantown, W. Va., will speak today at a meeting of the Potomac Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at St. John's Church, Bethesda, Md.



Even on Taxation

THERE IS AN "AREA OF AGREEMENT" BETWEEN MEN OF DIFFERING VIEWS

FORTUNE'S ROUND TABLE DISCOVERS A PRACTICAL WORKING BASE FOR A TAX POLICY

Newest editorial project explores history's sourest apple of discord

TO FIND a practical working basis for immediate tax reform in the interests of national recovery, FORTUNE gathered together at its Second Round Table fifteen outstanding men who were known to disagree, not only in their general economic philosophy, but most specifically on many aspects of tax policy.

Ranging in views from Left to Right, they included a very liberal manufacturer, a very conservative manufacturer, a prominent Socialist, a highly articulate farmer, 2 bankers, 2 lawyers, an accountant, 4 economists of various schools (among them one of Sweden's most distinguished practical Socialists), a labor union official, a technical expert on Taxation.

For hours these men explored together the problem of Taxation and Recovery, in all its exasperating complexity—seeking not to convert one another to some different view, but to find the area on which they could all agree.

The report of this session of The Round Table, conducted by Dr. Raymond Leslie Buell, FORTUNE's Round Table Editor, is published in FORTUNE for May—and a more convincing demonstration of the effectiveness of The Round Table method could hardly be hoped for.

Taxation and Recovery

The Editors of FORTUNE believe it is major news that all shades of opinion agreed almost unanimously in recommending as an immediate Federal Tax Program:

1. Relief of the poor by repeal of all federal excise and sales taxes (except gasoline, tobacco and liquor).

2. An increase of $700,000,000 in the income tax, to be raised from the middle income brackets by lowering exemptions and raising present rates.

3. Reform of corporation taxes to eliminate double taxation of dividends, the capital-stock tax, the excess-profits tax; also to permit consolidated returns, reasonable allowances for depreciation, and the carry-over of losses.

4. Abolition of tax exempt securities.

5. Establishment of a National Tax Commission to formulate long-term tax policy, eliminating present uncertainty and complexity.

Equally significant is their agreement that Federal Taxation should be for revenue only, and that the present system is:

A. Inadequate, because it cannot raise enough revenue.

B. Inequitable, because it bears too heavily on the poor.

C. Unsound, because it holds back investment and employment by bearing too heavily on the rich.

True, the report includes a number of minor deviations, also some important dissenting opinions. But it is significant to note that such disagreements do not represent mere quarrels between political "Rights" and "Lefts".

FORTUNE's Only Crusade

The Editors of FORTUNE do not usually picture themselves as Crusaders. But the need at this time for discovering the "area of agreement", between men of opposing views, on the nation's controversies is pressing and immediate—if the American way of life is to be preserved.

So the search for the "area of agreement" has become their single Crusade.

Leading men in all walks of American life are very much aware of the valuable and necessary work FORTUNE is doing.

"I hope," writes GERARD SWOPE, President of General Electric, "a Committee of Congress will be appointed to consider this report."

"Constructive and beneficial," says SENATOR PAT HARRISON, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"Useful at any time," agrees ARTHUR KROCK, "The Round Table on taxation and recovery is especially valuable now."

"From this wide area of agreement discovered by FORTUNE," summarizes WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, "we ought to be able to get somewhere."

From Republicans, Democrats, Socialists, from businessmen, philosophers, statesmen come further comments.

"There is benefit in bringing together for the exchange of ideas, as you have, competent experts holding different points of view, and encouragement is to be found in their agreement." ARTHUR A. BALLANTINE, Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, New York.

"FORTUNE's Round Tables are getting better and better. Taxation and Recovery is excellent." FRANK BANE, Executive Director, The Council on State Governments.

"The FORTUNE Round Table on Taxation and Recovery makes a real contribution to a clear understanding of this difficult subject." CORNELIUS N. BLISS.

"I commend you heartily for the good work you are doing. There is no doubt that as more light is cast on this subject it cannot but work for the benefit of all." SAMUEL J. BLOOMINGDALE, Chairman of the Board, Bloomingdale Bros., New York.

"You put the tax situation in the palm of my hand." CHARLES P. CURTIS, JR.

"FORTUNE is doing a very constructive piece of work in conducting these Round Table discussions on problems of such great importance." H. B. FOLSOM, Treasurer, Eastman Kodak Co.

"This whole report deserves very careful consideration, particularly on the part of our legislators." A. CONGER GOODYEAR, President, Great Southern Lumber Co., Inc.

"The Second FORTUNE Round Table is an extraordinarily effective statement of points of agreement and open questions." ARTHUR N. HOLCOMBE, Professor of Government, Harvard University.

The FORTUNE Round Table is the third major new way of revealing and reporting significant news to be developed by FORTUNE. It ranks in importance with the FORTUNE corporation story which first introduced objective journalism into the news of business. And with the now famous FORTUNE Survey, which was the first scientific sampling of public opinion—and whose findings have become a subject of closest study by men of public affairs all over the country.

An Old Order Changeth, Giving Way to the New

'Happy Endings' No Longer Theatrical Fetich; Maurice Evans Introduces a 'Room Mate;' News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

A COMPARATIVELY FEW YEARS AGO a theatrical week like the present in Washington would have been adjudged impossible by any astute showman. The public was supposed to react favorably only to screen expositions of complete and ecstatic happiness. The current week, and the one to come, seem to be pretty tragic.

Take the case of "Wuthering Heights," contiuing into its second week, at Loew's Palace, for instance. "Wuthering Heights" is anything but a charade dedicated to gayety. Yet it is one of the most supremely satisfying film releases of the season. It tells a tragic tale, unenlivened by any interpolations of "comedy relief," but it is a play of such fine integrity, such impeccable writing, direction and acting that it soars into the exalted realm of the cinema's classic love stories.

BELL

"Wuthering Heights" already has been comprehensively reviewed—I hope—in these columns and another detailed recital of the picture's superiorities will not be set down again now. It is enough to say that Merle Oberon and Laurence Olivier give infallible performances in the costellar roles of the Charles MacArthur-Ben Hecht adaptation of the Emily Bronte novel. They are superbly supported by David Niven, Donald Crisp, Miles Mander, Flora Robson, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Hugh Williams, Leo G. Carroll, Romaine Callender, Douglas Scott and numerous others.

One suspects that "Wuthering Heights" will be on most of the critics' lists of the "ten best pictures of the year" when the next voting on this moot question comes around.

Then there is the item of "Dark Victory," which opened on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater yesterday, without benefit of stage show—for the first time, I believe, that anything like this has happened on Thirteenth street. A full review of "Dark Victory" will appear in this approximate space on Saturday morning after it has been presented on Friday with the complement of living entertainment, which will round out the bill for the ensuing week. We already have gone more or less on record with regard to "Dark Victory," following its recent preview. Like "Wuthering Heights," it is not a happy picture. It is, however, one that is illuminated by a brilliant performance by Bette Davis in the stellar role. George Brent also contributes one of his most convincing portrayals to this excellent film and other outstanding impersonations are to be credited to Humphrey Bogart, Geraldine Fitzgerald—the same young actress who is in "Wuthering Heights"—and a considerable number of others. One imagines that "Dark Victory" will repeat the popular success of "Wuthering Heights," which in many respects it closely resembles. Neither has a happy ending, which gets back to the initial statement in the first paragraph of this column.

Some of the other screen exhibits now on view are not quite so tragic as the two releases dwelt upon sketchily in preceding paragraphs. "Dodge City," going bangingly on its way at the Metropolitan, is a Technicolor "Western" that embodies a great deal of violence, but still does not leave a dominant impression of tragedy; "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," of course, is completely genial entertainment. But tragic overtones again will exert themselves on the screen at RKO-Keith's, following this engagement, when "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" becomes the feature of the bill.

And then there is "Hamlet," at the National, with Maurice Evans in a magnificent performance of the play in a version never before seen in Washington. This is not altogether a gay number, either. It is, nevertheless, gayer than "Hamlet" ever before has been made to appear. It is something that should be seen by everyone who really wishes to know what "Hamlet" is all about. But today will offer the last chance. Tomorrow Mr. Evans will present, both matinee and night, his production of "Henry IV," Part I, in which he assumes the role of Falstaff.

Here, indeed, will be contrast, if the theater ever offered it.

It is interesting to recall that when Mr. Evans was here last in "Richard II," he went into some detail with regard to the matter of "Henry IV" in conversation with this column. It had not then been produced. But it was in process of eager planning. The point I particularly remember is that Mr. Evans then showed me a picture of his father in the role of Falstaff, as the elder Evans had played it in England. It was his father's make-up and costuming of the part that Maurice planned to follow and that is what he has done. I will be there tomorrow night to see the thing come off. It is not out of mind, either, that Orson Welles recently presented a rather unique conception of the role of Falstaff on the same stage in "Five Kings." There must inevitably be mental comparisons, even if they never are printed.

Speaking of Mr. Evans, as practically everybody is this week, he is not the sole occupant of the star dressing-room at the National on this visit. He is sharing the honor with a newcomer. The newcomer's name is "Tuppence." "Tuppence" is a white Scottie— or is it Cairn?—with a fine sense of camaraderie and hospitality, equal almost to his master's. "Tuppence" is quite a fellow, even if he does look like half of that famous canine Scotch whisky trademark! Mr. Evans is quite a fellow, too, in case you may have failed to catch the idea from previous writings.

So along comes an invitation from our old friend, Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity for Twentieth Century-Fox Pictures, to attend the world premiere of "Young Mr. Lincoln," starring Henry Fonda, to be held in Springfield, Ill., on Memorial Day. Marian Anderson, the Negro contralto, recently a Washington storm center, will sing on this occasion. The premiere, as I gather it from the letter, will be exclusively invitational. It will—or would—be nice to be there. Maybe between now and Memorial Day something can be done about it.

In-Case-You-Hadn't-Noticed Note

Yeah, still hot and muggy. So Oscar and Etheldreda, the old roadside acrobats, have postponed their spring tour. Sorry.

Hamlet Undergoes a Metamorphosis

whose full-text version of "Hamlet" is making Shakespearean history at the National Theater this week, as he appears in the role of Falstaff in "Henry IV," Part I. "Henry IV" will be presented at both the matinee and night performances at the National tomorrow, mechanical difficulties having precluded the alternation of the two plays during the week, as originally planned

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, April 27.

THOMAS MANN: Your son-in-law, W. H. Auden, and his collaborator, Christopher Isherwood, both will apply for American citizenship within the next few days . . . Edward Johnson: Rose Bampton of your Metropolitan Opera Co. was selected to inaugurate the World's Fair ceremonies Sunday by singing "The Star-Spangled Banner" . . . Solicitor Gen. Bob Jackson: When you leave your present post the job will be assigned to Francis B. Biddle, who just was appointed a Federal judge in Pennsylvania . . . District Attorney Geoghan: If you don't resign within the next few days, two separate groups are preparing to ask for your removal.

GEORGE S. KAUFMAN: Your collaborator, Moss Hart, didn't show up at the courthouse where you both are defending a suit for having referred to "Chock Full o' Nuts"—because Moss was at his psychoanalyst's office . . . After being psychoanalyzed, Moss lunched with Arthur Kober, to whom he described the number of trees he is having transplanted to his Bucks County farm . . . "All those trees?" Kober replied. "If I didn't know you were having your head examined I'd tell you to go and have your head examined."

NEWSPAPER GUILD: Robert M. Hutchins' most recent conversation with the President had no reference to his quitting his job at the University of Chicago to join the Securities and Exchange Commission. Their talk related to the advisability of Hutchins becoming an editor of a Chicago daily . . . David Dubinsky: Tickets to your I. L. G. W. U.'s hit revue, "Pins and Needles," are being sold at a premium—at the swanky Racquet and Tennis Club here . . . Cordell Hull: The Chase Bank, which canceled its ad commitments last week, because of the possibilities of war, now has restored them . . . Police Commissioner Valentine: The $1,250 ermine wrap belonging to Eva Reyes, dancer at the Havana-Madrid, was stolen from a car parked outside the cafe on Sunday night.

ATTORNEY GENERAL MURPHY: This week all the newspapers reported that Anna Sage, "the woman in red" who delivered John Dillinger to the G-men, had been paid her $5,000 reward by former G-Man Dunne, now in Los Angeles . . . As a matter of fact, that reward was paid a long time ago. Contrary to Dunne's statement, it was paid by the late Sam Cowley, who was in charge of the Dillinger hunt and who later was killed by Baby-Face Nelson . . . J. Edgar Hoover has the receipt she signed at the time

NOBLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION: The Goodrich Tire Co. has a job waiting for a real French countess. They want her to operate a guillotine, whose ax would fall upon some Goodrich tires to test their resistance . . . Henry Luce: Alan Jackson, who was one of the editors of your Time and Fortune magazines, will become an editor for the Saturday Evening Post . . . Paul Draper: Your mother, Muriel Draper, hasn't heard from you since you left for Europe. Last night, at an auction for Spanish refugees, she looked into her purse and said: "I'll start paying Peter, as soon as I can borrow some from my Paul."

GEORGE RECTOR: Carl Van Vetchen invited some guests to a Chinese dinner at his home . . . The guests included Anna Mae Wong, Mae Mae Tco, Bennett Cerf, the publisher, and Lin Yutang, author of "The Importance of Living" . . . "First," said Miss Wong, "we'll have some Chinese appetizers"—and brought out a strange concoction . . . "And now," announced Yutang, "we'll have Chinese soup—served in Chinese melon . . . "And next," informed Van Vetchen, "we have the Chinese entree," serving another strange dish . . . "And when," asked Cerf, "do we get the Chinese bicarbonate?"

EMILY POST: H. G. Wells has introduced a new note into dinner entertainment. After all his guests have dined, Wells insists that every lady present smoke a cigar . . . W. C. Fields: Joan Crawford now is deciding whether or not to get away from Hollywood and appear in the new Broadway musical which will star you . . . Fire Commissioner McElligott: William Saroyan went to see his play, "My Heart's in the Highlands," again. He rushed back stage and congratulated everybody, shouting: "You were swell." He told a tall man: "You gave an especially swell performance." Saroyan then started to smoke and the same tall man stopped him. "Why can't I smoke?" asked the author. "I," replied the tall man, "am the fireman here."

ADOLF HITLER: The editors of the New Yorker Magazine believe that "The Strange Death of Adolf Hitler" is true in many details—that you died some years ago and that a double was placed at the helm of the Reich . . . Some issues ago the New Yorker published a letter from "a German doctor," who related that he had treated you when you were a boy and that you had four fingers—but when he met you recently, he noticed that you had five fingers . . . and that you paled at the expose . . . That "German doctor" who wrote the article was Frank Sullivan.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 27.—I've been neglecting babies lately, really forgot how cute they are, so was fascinated by the 8-month old Bert whom Ginger Rogers is mothering in "Little Mother." Ginger, who's such a darling and looks so rested since her Eastern vacation, did a scene with that grand old lady, Ferike Baros. You know, she was the landlady in "Love Affair."

HOPPER

Baby gurgled, did pat-a-cake, bared its four teeth, nearly chewed off a foot, sat up and said, "Dada." And Ginger couldn't make him change that to "Mama." Why do babies always call dad first?

Ferike got that job in "Love Affair" through Director John Cromwell whom she worked for on the stage for ten years. Hollywood gave her the go-by for two and a half years. Six months ago she was up for a Jewish mother at Universal. They told her she didn't look Jewish and gave it to an Irish woman. She's had three schools of acting and still coaches. And I think the right method, too. For six months her pupils got nothing but Shakespeare and poetry.

She played with Eleanora Duse and told me that a year before Duse died, she had learned the role of Juliet.

A real artist never stops learning until the end comes. Maybe that's the reason we have so many new faces each year. You can't learn acting in a night club.

Imagine having a boy friend as attractive as Cary Grant and then making your first trip to England without him. That's what Phyllis Brooks is doing. 'Twas all arranged over the long distance telephone. She was packed and on her way to do a picture there in 24 hours. And she took a nice gift from Darryl Zanuck with her. Had two more weeks on her contract with him. He not only released her, but gave her a week's salary. Nice, yes?

Bill Fields and Greg La Cava now feuding. Seems Bill couldn't win at ping-pong. So the other night at Dave Chasen's, slipped out into the patio, "buttered" Greg's racket. Result: Bill won, 11-0.

And we're called sophisticates!

We'll be calling on Doctor Kildare for many months. I liked the new one with Lionel Barrymore and Lew Ayres better than the first. Director Harold Bucquet knows what he wants, and doesn't go around the curve to get it. Keep your eye on Lorraine Day—she's a natural. And Lana Turner, given platinum hair, could carry on the Jean Harlow legend. Sorry Emma Dunn, Alma Krueger and Bobs Watson had such small parts. They deserve more. It's pictures like this and the Hardys which bankroll the epics. But I'll take vanilla.

Television has built up its own Frankenstein. Neither radio nor pictures quite know what to do with it. But tell us it's just around the corner. If I knew which one, I'd use the other. It will be many a year (because reading is still entertaining) that we'll want to enjoy a picture alone. Our herd instinct is too strong.

You make an error only to learn something. From many letters, I've discovered Irving Berlin's song, "God Bless America" is on sale at practically every music store. But I didn't know that Bing Crosby has made a record of it. Sure I've ordered it.

Bing has also made a record of "The Star-Spangled Banner." And when Bob Hope heard about it, he said, "Oh, flag waving! Trying to bring back an old favorite, huh?—Only wish I'd thought of it first.

Seems Gentleman Jim Corbett, when he was champion, did the play on Broadway for Bill Brady, with dire results. And Shaw's memory is likened to that of an elephant. And you won't believe it, but a studio wants Joe Louis for O'Neil's "Emperor Jones."

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 27 (INS).—Vincent Price, Albert in Helen Hayes' "Victoria Regina," gets another crack at the movies and this time as Sir Walter Raleigh in "The Knight and the Lady." Hal Wallis signed him after extensive tests to play the rival of Essex (Errol Flynn) for the affections of Queen Elizabeth (Bette Davis). Personally, I believe Price, who was really very good on the stage and not so good in "Service De Luxe," the one movie he made, will find the Raleigh role better for him.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Speaking of Bette Davis, I am glad to hear that she rates a vacation following "The Old Maid" and "The Knight and the Lady." She has been working far too hard and looks thin and tired. It would be a mistake for Warners to give Bette too many pictures. Although, I believe, she finds her work her greatest joy, she sould be persuaded to take life easier.

You all know the story of Enoch Arden, who was mourned for dead for seven years and returned to find that his wife had remarried and that his children's lives were going along so happily he couldn't intrude! Well, that's the idea in "The Courageous Seaman," a magazine story by George Kaiser. The hero, supposed to have died a glorious death at sea, comes back after seven years and finds his family have gone social and that he cannot fit into the picture. So he goes back to his ship. Louis B. Mayer has bought it for Wallace Beery, who, by the way, is really unhappy that his wife has gone back to Reno.

I have just finished reading Edna Ferber's "A Peculiar Treasure," which is an amazingly frank biography, and in it she particularly mentions "Old Man Minick," which was a hit on the stage, but which she never thought was worthy of being dramatized. I am afraid she was modest, for Warners are now remaking it under the title of "Unwanted." Fred Stone will play the old man, with beauteous, blonde Gloria Dickson as the girl and Dennis Morgan (alias Stanley Morner) in the juvenile male lead. Fred was at May Robson's birthday luncheon and it was then that Jack Warner made his decision to star him in the Ferber play.

Chatter in Hollywood: I am told confidentially that Elaine Barrie Barrymore's overwhelming ambition for a career is back of her break with John. She never made any secret of her determination to be a big star on the stage or screen. From the be-beginning, it was obvious she was disappointed in the limited opportunities given her in pictures and never let up pressing John to lend his lustre to promote her on the stage. Certainly he was devotion itself to his bride—for at the time they left here he canceled two big screen roles to go East and give her a chance in "My Dear Children." Not long ago I printed that there was plenty of grief writing and rewriting the play after John insisted on enlarging his wife's part.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Ronnie, Leslie Howard's son, is in line for the junior draft in England, and should he be called, Mrs. Howard will hop the first boat for home; Mrs. Ernest Truex has been stepping out with a Warren Newmark, 'tis said; what's this—another one of our stars becoming a dancer? Bob Taylor dances in "Lady of the Tropics;" Parkyarkarkus is hourly awaiting a little Parkie—his wife is already in the hospital; Carl Leammle, sr., one of filmland's great men, is giving a large cocktail party in honor of junior's birthday on Sunday; Brian Aherne taking bows for his Maximilian performance with Bob Fairbanks' pretty daughter, Lucille; Ramon Novarro, who looks better than ever and should be working in movies, lunching at a tavern; Geraldine Spreckles and Ivan Lebedeff, old Palsie Walsies, sipping cocktails; Errol Flynn won out in his argument with Warners and won't follow the historical pictures of Essex, which show a heavy beard. He will compromise by wearing a goatee.

Add the name of George Marshall to the list of Hollywood folk who have made a hole in one. He was playing with Frank Lloyd, Randy Scott and Bill Seiter and too excited to even speak; Spencer Tracy will have an audience with the new Pope when he goes to Rome; Rochelle Hudson lunching with Hal Thompson, reported as her fiance; David Selznick is talking with M-G-M about another Freddie Bartholomew picture. It was he who brought Feddie to this country for "David Copperfield;" George Raft's ovation at Salt Lake City on the "Union Pacific" junket was an eye-opener for the Para crowd; eye-opener for the Park crowd; Harry Brand is back from Honolulu after a brief vacation. While he was away his father passed on and Harry's friends were sympathizing with him today.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Hair in Demand

Paramount studio has bought up most of the available stock of crepe hair to make whiskers and mustaches for the 468 types in "Hotel Imperial," which stars Isa Miranda and Ray Milland.

Actor Waits Eight Years for Medal

Holmes Herbert has just received a French Photographic Society acting medal sent to him in 1931 in recognition of the group's approval of his acting in "Madame X."

The veteran character actor, now with Boris Karloff and Margaret Lindsay in "Enemy Agent," had been out of town when the medal arrived. The studio fan mail department forwarded it to his home where it was misplaced by a servant.

It came to light eight years later when Holmes was showing a friend some souvenirs of early talking picture days.

You be a Man from Missouri

IF YOU REALLY WANT the low-down on these new Nash cars, step right up to the next bright and shining face you see behind a Nash windshield. (You may have to shout—for when those windows are up, he can hardly hear anything on the outside.)

Don't be backward—because he's aching to tell you all. Only, if he talks like a man from California, you be a man from Missouri. Don't let him get away with a thing.

When he claims that engine is so smooth he can hardly hear it, edge inside . . . make him step on the starter and prove it. Cock your ear . . . and feel the floor-board for the vibration that isn't there.

When he boasts about the terrific pick-up of the new Nash engine—just ride with him up to the next red light. Watch his fingers flick that gear-shift*—feel that cushion behind you flatten out.

Then look back to see the other cars!

When he waves his hand in the air then you know he's trying to describe the feeling of the Nash Fourth Speed Forward.* For it's not driving—it's more like flying, and Webster needs new words to describe it.

If you ask about the Nash "Weather Eye*", he'll tell you how he drove all last winter without an overcoat. He'll show you now how dust, bugs, drafts, are spirited away forever. (Be sure to see the cigarette trick.)

Just try to get away without him telling about the Nash convertible bed in back...or the special soundproofing and shock-absorbers that only Nash uses.

And if he tells you some whoppers about Nash economy, don't try to argue back. For these big Nash-LaFayette models beat all cars in their price class in the Gilmore-Yosemite economy run with 21.25 miles to the gallon.

According to the people who own it, this new Nash is a veritable "Paul Bunyan" of a car. There doesn't seem to be anything it can't do!

Frankly, in all our 24 years, we've never had such enthusiastic owners. We do hope you'll talk to one of them—before you buy this year.

And you can't spend much less for a new car—for ten Nash models are priced next to the lowest!

THE CAR EVERYBODY LIKES

MAKE A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER! This big four-door Nash Sedan . . . 99 horsepower . . . 117-inch wheelbase . . . 3285 lbs. weight—costs only $840 delivered at factory, standard equipment and Federal taxes included. Choice of trunk-back or fast-back model. (White sidewall tires*.)

"Mad, Sweet Heaven!"

We seem to remember that a year or two ago some medico-statistical authority suggested that if the present rate of incidence in nervous and mental disorders were continued, by 1999 or thereabouts the entire population of the United States would be confined in sanatoria or asylums. Thus, though the unemployment problem would be solved at last in a great national outburst of vocational therapy, the national economy would be shipwrecked on mountainous surpluses of hooked rugs, basketware, lampshades and hammered-brass cigarette boxes.

We thought at the time that the forecast was not quite as serious as it sounded. By 1999, we reflected, the Bell Telephone Laboratories and the Westinghouse Electric Company would surely have turned out enough of their wonderful robots to take over the management of a universe, to which human beings could no longer make the necessary psychic adjustments. But now comes news that is truly alarming.

Elektro, youngest and most gifted of the Westinghouse robots, and intended to be one of the major marvels at the New York World's Fair, has been exhibiting unmistakable symptoms of dementia praecox. As the guest of the New York Engineers Club the other day he astonished the members by his weird behavior. According to the New York Times, he told his hosts rudely to shut up, smoked incessantly, sang in a ribald bass and walked backwards.

It seems incredible, but with a little study of the environmental data in Elektro's case the clinical picture becomes all too clear. The actions reported are those of a robot whose emotional development has been definitely arrested, probably in the Oedipus relationship. He began his existence with the severe handicap of being the youngest in a family of marvels, and the attention attracted to him by his precocity undoubtedly aroused the mechanical jealousy of the siblings thus crowded from the limelight.

This jealousy, plus the consciousness of his bulky and ungainly figure (he is 7 feet tall and weighs 260 pounds) engendered a feeling of personal inadequacy and insecurity which now seeks compensation in aggressive social attitudes. A characteristic of these cases is an unconscious hatred of the male parent. Thus Elektro's antics at the Engineers Club might be interpreted as an act of revenge against his inventor, J. M. Barrett, who was present.

Everyone knows the somber prognosis in such cases. That business of walking backward, for instance, is significant of the psychomotor disturbance which usually heralds a complete breakdown of the personality. Perhaps a few good hookers of insulin might snap Elektro out of it, but the chance is remote. Meanwhile, what are we to make of our brave new world in which even machines can go mad?

Small Loans Again

The House District Committee is making a new attempt to draft a local small-loans bill that will meet the approval of both the House and Senate. Several similar attempts have failed, but the need for supervision of this business is acute. It should not be difficult for the committee to devise legislation that would, at least in some measure, improve the status of small borrowers now at the mercy of loan sharks.

Three bills before the committee will doubtless serve as a basis for the hearings scheduled at 2 p. m. today. They appear to be aimed chiefly at strengthening the present law against extortionate interest charges. But that is only one phase of the problem. A comprehensive view of small-loan needs, as well as of abuses resulting from the present lack of control, ought to be taken before new legislation is drawn.

Investigators long ago found a very positive need here for loans of less than $300 or $400 to persons unable to offer collateral. Interest on such loans should be permitted at rates that will bring legitimate small-loan companies into the field, which means that interest must be substantially above anything that would be considered reasonable for well-secured loans. If the rate should be fixed below the figure at which legitimate companies can operate, the result would be to keep the sharks in operation, to drive borrowers to Maryland and Virginia, where high rates prevail, or to deny loans in cases of actual emergency.

While serving the District as corporation counsel E. Barrett Prettyman drafted a small-loans bill which obtained a good deal of support. It would have permitted interest as high as 2 per cent a month, with a small additional service charge. After a careful study Mr. Prettyman concluded that this was the lowest figure which would attract legitimate small-loan companies into the field. His judgment may have been in error, but in studying the issue anew the District Committee ought to give careful thought to the encouragement of a sound and reliable small-loan business. It is not merely a matter of striking a blow at a form of extortion.

Dangerous Departure

Freedom is a plant that withers easily when a nation is scorched by the flames of war. That well-attested fact is borne home again as the great European democracies gird their loins for a conflict whose indefinite postponement no nation can afford to take for granted.

This week the French government, exercising the emergency powers recently granted by Parliament, has issued a decree regulating the press in the republic. In contrast with the standard practice in dictatorships the decree seems relatively mild. Nonetheless it constitutes a definite and dangerous departure from democratic tradition.

The order declares that, "in view of the effort France is making for national defense, hatred between citizens must be suppressed." Slander and defamation of "any group of persons belonging to any particular race or religion" is, therefore, prohibited. At the same time the receipt of foreign funds for political propaganda in France is made a penal offense.

It is no secret that certain sections of the French press have often shown disgraceful readiness to offer themselves for sale to the highest bidder. Undoubtedly certain countries have taken advantage of this fact to sow in France the seeds of internal dissension, religious bigotry and racial intolerance. The greater the disunity in France the more the enemies of France stand to profit. Certainly a very good case can be made for regulations throwing the light of pitiless publicity on those who act as secret agents of foreign powers.

Not so good a case can be made out for governmental suppression of individual opinion, however false in its factual basis or propagandist in its motivation. Tolerance of such excesses, within well-recognized bounds, is the price which democracies must pay for the perpetuation of liberty. The French government's press decree is dangerous because it leaves the way open for all manner of abuses. Applicable ostensibly only to slanderous statements, it may all too easily be extended to honest critics, or even ultimately to all periodicals which fail to see eye to eye with the powers that be.

"It is not only the interests of individuals," the decree declares, "but national collectivity as well that is involved. Everything that divides, weakens; everything that reinforces union renders stronger."

Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin subscribe to this seductive but meretricious argument and may cite it in justification of tactics which have made all newspapers in their countries servile mouthpieces of their regimes.

It is a tragic aspect of the present trend that effective opposition to the dictatorships seems to involve the use of dictatorial weapons. And so the poison spreads.

British Defense Costs

"It is easy," says Sir John Simon, Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, "to authorize great increases of expenditure to be met from borrowing, and it is difficult and painful to find even a small proportion by taxation."

Indeed, confronted by budgetary outlays in excess of $6,000,000,000, nearly half of the total for defense purposes, Sir John might have made the emergency a valid excuse for omitting tax increases. That he did not take the easy way out testifies to the reluctance of the British to abandon the sound principle of calling upon the taxpayers to contribute to the limit of their ability.

With the standard rate already up to 27½ per cent, it certainly did not seem feasible to add to the burdens of the income-tax payer of moderate means. Consequently the tax increases are confined to surtax payments in the higher income groups, estate taxes and increased duties on articles of consumption such as tobacco and sugar. Thus all classes in the community—rich and poor alike—are called upon to make fresh sacrifices to help support the enormous burden of the defense program.

The additional revenues obtainable from the new levies are negligible compared with the size of the prospective deficit of approximately $1,800,000,000. Nevertheless, it is a reminder that the use of borrowed money "does not do more than postpone the burden" that must eventually be borne by the taxpayer, as Sir John Simon stated in his budget speech. Even when the gap between government income and outgo becomes so great that it can only be bridged by loans, a policy that exacts some new contributions from taxpayers, however limited, is salutary discipline.

The economic burden of Britain's defense program will be further increased by the government's conscription plan. That will weigh heavily upon the country, although its real cost cannot be measured in terms of monetary outlays. The withdrawal of thousands of young men from their peacetime occupations for purposes of military training will entail personal sacrifices in loss of potential earnings, and national economic sacrifices due to diversion of labor from constructive peacetime pursuits.

Even now Great Britain's budgetary position is less serious than ours. To be sure, she has a smaller population and a lower national income than the United States. Hence a deficit of the size in prospect is more formidable than it would be in our case. However, such comparisons make no allowance for the fact that our local tax burdens are much heavier per capita than those of the British.

A further significant difference lies in the circumstance that our deficits are products of peacetime spending, whereas the British deficits are an outgrowth of spending for protection against a particularly menacing kind of war threat.

Federal Loan Agencies

The comprehensive Federal Loan Agency which the President proposes to establish embraces several important independent lending organizations. These include the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Housing Administration, the Electric Home and Farm Authority and the Export-Import Bank.

Some doubt exists as to the wisdom of bringing together this varied assortment of agencies, temporary and permanent. However, there is no immediate prospect of liquidating such an important temporary organization as the RFC. And there is a real need for better co-ordination of lending operations. At various points the lending agencies now impinge upon one another and at times they have been in open conflict in respect to policies. Some kind of centralized supervision is, therefore, required to make the separate parts of the Government's credit machinery function more smoothly.

The extent to which this objective is attained will depend very largely upon the ability of the administrator appointed to head the proposed loan agency. Obviously he could not be expected to attend to the detailed operations of the numerous organizations scheduled to come under his supervision. His main task will be that of a co-ordinator who will necessarily rely upon the expert advice of subordinate specialists.

At first it would probably be unwise to make any radical changes in the underlying organizations. However, as the different groups become accustomed to close contact, and as experience demonstrates how the work can be more effectively integrated, opportunities for increasing the economy and efficiency of the composite organization will be afforded.

In all but name the amalgamated Federal Loan Agency will be another executive department headed by an official whose status will be comparable to that of a Cabinet member. If that comparison is kept in mind, the task assigned the head of the new agency will not seem so formidable. His chief duty will be that of spokesman for subordinate administrators in his contacts with the President, and he will also be a general liaison officer.

On the whole, therefore, the proposed loan agency seems to provide a logical grouping of related activities which should ultimately facilitate more efficient and economical functioning of the Government's complicated lending machinery.

Unfortunately this outlook does not apply to the proposal to shift the Farm Credit Administration and other agricultural credit agencies to the Department of Agriculture. It would be much more appropriate to concentrate all agricultural lending operations in the Farm Credit Administration, leaving the Department of Agriculture to devote itself to the problems of agriculture as distinct from finance.

It is no more logical to shift lending agencies to the Department of Agriculture than it would be to bring the RFC or the FHA under the Department of Commerce merely because they advance money to assist industry.

The Duce It Is!

Italian government communique; translated in Living Age.

We have again noted the oft-deplored persistence in the substitution of the word Capo (Head) for the title Duce.

The word Duce cannot be replaced by any other because it alone defines the Man and designates the character of a revolution and of a civilization.

In fact, Mussolini is not the Capo; he is the Duce. He does not merely preside over the nation's government: he commands, guides, animates the Fascist people through his genius and his will.

The word Duce was invested with immediate historic import from the moment his spirit gave forth the first spark of revolution; Mussolini has been consecrated Duce by universal gratitude for the new civilization which he has created, the new civilization which dominates our century and which will grow to ever more gigantic proportions in the future.

Not Capo: Duce!

Evans' Hamlet

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his interesting review of Hamlet, in The Post of April 25, your dramatic critic characterizes the presentation of the full-length play as "illuminating." In that opinion we can all concur. However, he makes the further, and somewhat surprising, statement that the "content, motivation and purpose of the multiple scenes" are made so clear that the Prince of Denmark "becomes merely a worried and harassed young man intent upon righting grievous wrongs," etc.

The second quotation contradicts the first. If this were all, the exhaustive study, immense effort, and beautiful acting of Mr. Evans and the cast were in vain; the sums expended upon the production wasted.

Mr. Evans makes of Hamlet an intensely moving, very human figure; with great depth of character, strong, yet preyed upon by indecision; loving, kindly, yet swayed by hatred and revenge; so consumed by the desire to avenge the wrongs committed against his father, the state—and himself—that he could put aside all other pursuits and purposes of life as of little moment.

We who have been privileged to see this wonderful interpretation of the central figure will surely agree that he is presented as infinitely greater than "merely a worried and harassed young man." M. G. K.

Third Term

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Undoubtedly there is a move on foot to eliminate Mr. Roosevelt from a third term, based on the idea that it will break an old-time rule and establish a bad precedent.

Is it not a fine thing to break old rules and establish new precedents when desirable or necessary? If Mr. Roosevelt has made an excellent leader for two terms, having worked for the best interest of the masses of people, and saved the country from wreck and ruin, why should he be eliminated, simply because no other President was ever elected the third time?

Of course Mr. Roosevelt has made mistakes; nevertheless, where is there a Democrat or Republican who can displace him and carry on as successfully the great work he has done and is still doing, and in a most unselfish way? Where is there a man to succeed him who can hold the admiration and great respect of the people?

Is it possible that Democrats will fail to get together because of their dislike for Roosevelt and thereby throw the next election to the Republican Party? J. H. COFER.

A War Veteran's View

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Relative to Miss Dorothy Thompson's plea to bring 20,000 German children from Nazi Germany, may I, on the behalf of millions of unemployed, ill housed and ill fed war veterans, officially place our protest?

It was only last December that Dorothy Thompson and other humanitarians began collecting funds in this country for the unwanted minority in Nazi Germany, while our heroes of 1917 and 1918 were on the breadlines right in the country they fought for only a few years ago. I sent a letter to some members of the Dorothy Thompson committee asking them if they would not give some of these funds to the men who had fought for them in the World War. My request was ignored.

Is it not time that we Americans stand up for our rights and tell these international citizens of the world that charity begins at home?

We have hundreds of thousands of children born right in this country who are future Americans. These are the kiddies we must and should take care of. American children are America's problem. European children are Europe's problem.

Inadvertence

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am mighty sorry, but there has been an inadvertence, and I am misrepresented in my letter published in your columns April 26.

In the last paragraph you make me say that if the Wagner resolution becomes law it "could result in admission of 10,000,000 German children, all Nazi and no one of them anti-Nazi or persecuted, because of race, religion or the political views of their parents or themselves." If you will look at my letter, you will find that I said "ten thousand" and what I should have added was "ten thousand German children annually in excess of Germany's present enormous quota of 27,370 for 1939 and 1940."

Wage-Hour Law Defended

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter of Carroll R. Miller in The Post of April 23, conveys the impression that the wage-hour law may increase the farmer's labor costs by 70 per cent. Actually, farm labor costs will not be affected at all, as agriculture and agricultural labor are entirely exempt from compliance with this law. That the cost of production of apples will increase from 70 to 91 cents per bushel is therefore preposterous.

Moreover, it is misleading to assert that the law will increase the cost of farm machinery and supplies. Most manufacturers of such goods were paying wages of more than 25 cents or even 30 cents an hour before the wage-hour law went into effect, so that manufacturing costs will be but little affected, if at all.

Nor is there any basis for the contention that the costs of processing farm products are invariably passed back to the farmer. The AAA processing taxes were not so passed back, but were in part absorbed by the processors and in part paid for through higher wholesale and retail prices.

Granted that the economic condition of the farmer is deplorable and that he does not receive a fair price for his crops, it is reprehensible to attempt to attach responsibility for this condition to such socially constructive measures as the wage-hour law. Improvement of the farmer's lot can be achieved only by narrowing the enormous gap between farm prices and the retail price of food, and through measures to assure adequate returns to the farmer for his produce.

Those who foster the idea that the farmer's distress can be alleviated by denying a modest minimum wage to that large body of workers employed by the processors of farm commodities, who are employed only a few weeks of the year and often under deplorable conditions, represent neither the public nor the farmer's interest.

They represent a minority of selfish interests who, masquerading as the farmer's friend, use him as a front behind which to operate in continuing their exploiting of labor and the consuming public, and who seek to create hostility between labor and the farmer.

Civil Service Exam

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Upon being notified that I was one of those entitled to take the civil service examination for a stenographic position, I reported at the examination center on the second floor of a renovated building located in the heart of the downtown district.

After listening to the din of 100 or more typewriters in the morning we were told to return after lunch in the heat of a summer's day, when we were herded into a large room capable of seating at desks 250 persons. The examiner had at her disposal a $25 amplifier, which after testing all positions in the room and constantly yelling, "can you hear me," it was decided to abandon it because of rasping and peculiar noises emitting therefrom.

Then a scramble started for new positions at tables where one could hear above the tooting of horns and the clanging of street cars outside, coupled with the buzz of a ventilating fan from within. "All windows must be closed" came forth the order, despite the plea of one girl who said she felt faint from the heat, and later the remark was made that we couldn't expect an air-cooled room. Then began the straining of ear and nerve to get the dictation.

Are these mass examinations necessary? Could not the commission stagger these examinations, giving one each day, say to 50 persons, under classroom conditions in small, quiet rooms and returning the grades to the competitors immediately.

I am sure that some of these questions were in the minds of many who took the test. TEST TAKER.

Fitting Monument

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Standing on the East Potomac tennis courts watching the machinery laying the foundation for the $2,000,000 Thomas Jefferson Memorial while at least 15 Washingtonians were trying in vain to get access to one of the much overcrowded tennis courts in an effort to enjoy a little outdoor exercise, these thoughts occurred to me: How useless those huge blocks of marble will be to the people of this city.

I think Thomas Jefferson was a truly great man and deserves a monument, but he was also a very democratic man. Wouldn't it be more in keeping with the democratic principles to build a monument that would commemorate this distinguished man and at the same time afford some of the members of this democracy ample opportunity to gain both spiritual and physical improvement through healthful recreation.

With only a part of the $2,000,000, the present Administration could build a huge recreation center containing swimming pools, tennis courts that could be rented for a nominal fee, and also a golf course. A small stone monument could be erected at the entrance with words commemorating the life of this distinguished man.

I hope that others who feel the same way will express their sentiments on this subject. Perhaps if public sentiment will express itself strongly enough, this absurd practice of putting huge amounts of money in useless piles of steel and stone will be stopped by the officials and monuments will be erected in the future not only to the memory of a dead hero but also for the happiness and pleasure of the people still living. AN AMERICAN.

The Post Impressionist

On The Corner

THE DAY when it becomes practical to fingerprint the entire population will see an end of such mysteries as that which once caused my friend Taylor some concern. One of Taylor's characteristics at the time was his interest in "the man in the street," a line of research which sometimes got him in trouble. He tells the tale this way:

"On the corner of Main and South streets in my own town there stood every day one of these street venders whose main business, aside from selling pencils and shoestrings, appears to be to pose as an eccentric and provoke that notice which pleases his vanity. This particular specimen was a fellow of average height and weight. He had unkempt black hair and a heavy black beard through which his full lips looked excessively red. There were always patches of red right on his cheekbones. This was readily accounted for because he was out of doors in all weathers.

"In fact, he was always in the public eye, not only because he never left his corner while there was a chance for a sale, but because he was seen on Sundays and holidays in the parks and sandlots, wherever the crowds went, always alone and always looking the same. It seemed to me that he was painted so exactly on the town's consciousness that no question of his identity could ever arise. If you met him in Timbuctoo you would say 'There is that fellow who used to stand on the corner of Main street!'

"One day I stopped to buy a pencil, and as I did so something struck me as being slightly wrong. For a minute I could not pin the impression down to anything definite. Later it dawned on me that the man's eyes, which I had once supposed to be brown, were in fact a sharp and steely gray. The matter, of no real importance just then, left a disagreeable impression, which was increased a few days later by noticing that the man's eyes were no longer gray but, as I had thought at first, a peculiar opaque brown.

"From that moment I began a systematic observation of this man. I never again noticed any transformation so remarkable as the change in the color of his eyes; but from that time on there were days when the man wore colored glasses. There were other differences, however. Once I was sure that the hands were not the same. Once I noted a jagged scar on the right wrist. Later there was no scar there.

"No one pays any attention to the hands of a street peddler, and the color of their eyes is not of importance to anyone; therefore I had no mind to be laughed at by reporting my suspicions to the law. No one else appeared to notice anything peculiar in the man, but I could not escape the conviction that we miss more things because they are too evident than because they are not plain enough. Here, in view of anyone who cared to look, there was (I believed) a disguise, a character established, under cover of which a man might hide for a while until some danger was past, and then turn over the character part to another fugitive.

"But my conjectures varied from day to day. Once the man looked me straight in the eye and laughed, as if he were playing a macabre game with me. For a while after that I thought the whole business might be a strange way that the man had of feeding his vanity by deliberately provoking false suspicions. Then I would notice other proofs of a changing personality behind the disguise, and would return to my theory that here was a false front or facade behind which sinister operations were carried on. Sometimes my impression of danger was so acute that I was sure the present user of the disguise was a desperate criminal who would stop at nothing. Still I was uncertain what course to pursue, afraid of making a fool of myself.

"Once I tried to trace the man to his lodgings, but when he was not on exhibition he dropped completely out of sight. These intervals were brief, and there was almost no hour at which he was not to be seen.

"This went on for over two years, and then a change came over the situation, something felt rather than seen—a slackening of tension perhaps expresses what I felt. The man appeared less mocking, more at ease. He was absent from the corner for longer periods. Finally he disappeared and I never saw him again.

"I believe that during those years no less than 20 different men passed under that disguise. I came to think of it as one would a huge billboard concealing the country behind it and hiding many people and their doings; or as a stene under which strange creatures carried on lives of their own, foreign to the world above.

"I find it fantastic to believe that so many men were sufficiently alike to pass in this slight disguise without exciting the suspicions of others besides myself. But the man was of ordinary proportions; the black hair and beard and reddened mouth and face might change a man's appearance greatly without being too obviously a disguise. So I cling to the belief that I was in part a spectator at some drama of the underworld which I should have missed if it had not been for the carelessness of the gray-eyed man who relied a little too much on the public's indifference.

"Yet I sometimes wonder if I was not the victim of a practical joke, if the shoestring vender made the most of an opportunity to plague one of that public for which he could not have felt any great love. Perhaps at last he grew tired of his eerie game, and when it no longer amused him he went on to something new.

"But that does not explain the brown and the gray eyes."

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

"The Eastern Ind"

AFTER 12 YEARS in Japan, Mona Gardner, a Stanford University graduate, traveled south to see those vague, vast reaches sometimes called the East Indies, which are supposed to be the next area of Japanese expansion—French Indo-China, Siam, Dutch Java and British Malaysia, Ceylon and India. What she saw she tells in "The Menacing Sun" (Harcourt, Brace, $2.50).

She saw the Japanese photographers, equipped with the latest German gadgets, busily taking photographs in every village of the far southeastern corner of Asia; Japan's war department, she concluded, had for years been subsidizing these ubiquitous photograph shops, so that their operatives might accumulate for the home office photographs and vital data of all the countries on the "empire route." . . . She saw hundreds of crates marked "sewing machines" and "pianos" being shipped at Hongkong and transshipped at Hanoi to the freight cars on the narrow-gauge railroad that runs from the French colony up into the interior Chinese city of Yunanfu. French "neutrality," she concluded, was no more rigid than the Japanese accused it of being.

She heard stories of the iron mines worked by the Japanese at Trengganu, on the east side of the Malay Peninsula, which supply half of Japan's iron imports; the Japanese have built a 10-mile railway from the mines to the coast, she says, and have unloaded, to serve it, thirty modern locomotives, and 60 miles of extra steel rails, enough to lay a double line of tracks to the main line of the Malay railway that runs up into Siam . . . She looked into the tales of the Kra Canal, which alarmists say Japan is secretly building across Siam, to cut out the British citadel of Singapore, and decided that there was nothing to those stories, and never would be.

Everywhere she went she felt the growing consciousness of the shadow of Japan.

SHE SAW the incredible temples in the jungles of the French colony, and the well disciplined native regiment parading in the cool dusk (in natty uniforms, but barefoot), and the inefficient half-caste officials of the railroads and the customs, and, being familiar with the tight race lines of the Anglo-American sets in the Chinese treaty ports and in the British colonies, she marveled at the French freedom from race prejudice. "Possibly," she reflected, "this is the deciding factor between a successful and an unsuccessful colonization in the East. The man who is graciously received in a social way, it seems, has less rancor when his political freedom is curtailed. If it's a choice between engraved invitations to the governor's ball and the power to spend the taxes, the Asiatic would rather rub his thumb over the engraving, thank you."

Siam gave Mona Gardner a new faith in the East. She watched a pair of nuns from Brooklyn coaching a girls' baseball team in Bangkok; talked to Phya Bahol, the young leader of the bloodless revolution which had forced hundreds of the former King's expensive relatives to go to work; attended a governor's reception clad in blue shorts (her more formal clothes being stranded on a mud flat a mile and a half up the river), and she left Siam with an excited faith in the new democracy of this, the only independent, country in southeastern Asia.

DESPITE a British background in her own life, Miss Gardner was not much impressed with British technique in colonization. There was something curious about a government which could afford few schools for natives but could appropriate $10,000,000 to build a funicular railway to a 2,500-foot crag above Penang, where one hotel and perhaps 150 homes provided cool tropical comfort for a few alien civil officials and their families.

She saw little difference between Dutch and British methods, though the Dutch were more careful to retain a pattern of native law and tradition in their colonies. The bars to a brown man rising to a place of prestige and power in his own land, she felt, constituted a menace with the Japanese watching just around the corner of the continent.

In India Miss Gardner talked with that "shrewd saint," Gandhi, and with some of the Nationalist leaders who are named as his possible successors. She doubted the wisdom of Jawaharlal Nehru, a Socialist who, the British fear, might turn to Soviet Russia for India's future rehabilitation. That, Miss Gardner felt, would "mean that India would become Spain on a 'much larger and fiercer scale." Possibly such reflections have something to do with the current hesitations of British imperial statesmen.

On the boat in the Suez Canal Miss Gardner talked, in his own language, with an unhappy Japanese who avoided all the other passenger. "No one can feel kindliness to the Japanese people after what our soldiers have done," he said; and Miss Gardner, who had watched a Nipponese bombing plane machine-gunning women and children outside Shanghai, agreed with him.

Woman Seeks Son Gone Since 1917

Mrs. Sarah Dean, of 2724 Eleventh street northwest, yesterday asked The Post to help her find her son, Ernest, Moore Dean, who left home in 1917 at the age of 21.

We heard from him last in 1928, when he was in Detroit, and our belief now is that he has gone into Canada. He has a very light-colored skin and black wavy hair, and walks with a slight limp," she said.

Struggle For Outer Mongolia

By Mark J. Ginsbourg

Special Correspondence of The Post

Resumption Of The Border Strife

Shanghai.

WITH THE ADVENT of spring, blood is again flowing freely in the green, treeless plains in which Japanese-controlled Manchuria merges with the Soviet-dominated republic of Outer Mongolia.

The press of east Asia is again flooded with reports of sanguinary border clashes, protests, notes, ultimatums and recriminations. As is its wont, the Japanese Kwantung army, which governs the destinies of Manchuria, is threatening to mete dire punishment to the Mongol "invaders," while Moscow, with equal heat, is broadcasting warnings against attempts by "Fascist pigs who poke their dirty snouts" into Mongolia.

The picture is a familiar one to newspaper readers. Many a time in the past eight years, the clashes have merited banner headlines—such as the Battle of Tawlan, on March 31, 1936, when the Outer Mongolian force alone consisted of 12 light bombers, 13 armored cars, motorized artillery, a company of infantry and 300 cavalrymen. On other occasions, reports of the incidents have been buried in the back pages.

Irrespective of their extent, the incidents have all had one explanation. Russia is determined to maintain Outer Mongolia as a thick armor protecting the exposed Siberian flank. Japan is equally eager to come within striking distance of the Trans-Siberian Railway.

MILITARY OBSERVERS here agree that in a lightning raid across Outer Mongolia, toward Lake Baikal, alone does Japan have a chance—slim as it may be—of victory in the forthcoming war with Russia. A frontal attack anywhere along the Soviet border would be suicidal, for Russians have in the past three years built a powerful "Maginot Line" of 3,000 concrete pillboxes stretching all along the frontier, from Manchouli to the now famous Changkufeng Hill, near Korea.

A raid across Outer Mongolia, on the other hand, would find Russia entirely unprepared at a very vulnerable point. The Trans-Siberian Railway—one of the two lines linking Siberia with European Russia—and a new industrial center lie entirely unprotected at this point.

Once the railway is severed here, the entire eastern Siberia will find itself in a vaccum, left entirely to its own resources to fight a major war.

To Japan, Outer Mongolia is also a burning challenge. For about 1,500 miles the borders of this Soviet republic are contiguous upon Mongol-populated territory now overrun by Japanese troops. Border patrols cannot stop the trickle of undesirable ideas into Inner Mongolia, where many an arat—a poor nomad—dreams of following the Outer Mongolian example and getting rid of his princes and high lamas.

JAPAN'S DOMINATION of North China and the desperately sought victory in the country are impossible as long as ideas and arms continue to flow from Outer Mongolia to her nominal suzerain, China.

In this lies explanation of the costly and dangerous cordon sanitaire Japan is attempting to establish in Inner Mongolia. Today, Japanese outposts, manned partly by puppet Mongol troops, extend beyond the rich wool center in Paotou. The weakness of the wedge is indicated by the ease with which Chinese and Mongol guerrilla units, under Gen. Ma Chan-shan (whose failure to die after his death was reported to the Emporer had caused so much anguish to the Japanese high command) are operating in Inner Mongolia.

Russia's designation of Outer Mongolia as her protective belt was made two years ago, when Joseph Stalin, in an interview, announced that an attack on the Mongolian republic would instantly bring Soviet troops to its aid.

In a flurry of notes which were exchanged by Moscow and Tokyo after this sensational interview, the Soviet government further revealed that a verbal military agreement had been in existence since November 27, 1934, and that this had been confirmed in a formal written pact in February, 1936.

Simultaneously, in a friendly gesture toward the Chinese government (which, very reluctantly, protested against the agreement) Moscow reiterated its recognition of China's sovereignty over Outer Mongolia.

Japan's efforts to gain her ends by diplomatic means were as much of a failure as her armed incursions into Outer Mongolia. In February, 1935, after a particularly sanguinary border clash, the Kwantung army, through its puppet "Imperial Government" in Manchuria, proposed the convocation of a conference to define the frontier between the two countries.

While Moscow was not particularly anxious to bring Outer Mongolians across a conference table from the Japanese, requirements of international publicity forced its hands. After four months of preliminary dickering, the delegates gathered in the little Manchuriar border town of Manchouli to begin their pourparlers.

The pourparlers continued, with constant interruptions, until November, when another border clash gave the two delegations a welcome opportunity to break up the conference and return home. The negotiations were resumed the following year, but again without success.

A CURIOUS SIDELIGHT on the conference was the shooting of four Mongol members of the Manchurian delegation. The four men included the Governor of the Mongolian Hsingan Province of Manchuria, his chief of police and two smaller officials. A curt Kwantung army communique explained that the four delegates were guilty of conspiring with the Outer Mongol delegates to make Hsingan Province a part of the neighboring Soviet Mongolian republic.

All these developments served to keep Outer Mongolia in the limelight. Little, however, is known abroad of the history of the young Soviet republic or of its economic, social and political problems.

EVERYTHING has not been peaceful in Outer Mongolia since the revolution of 1921. The feudal-theocratic clique which ruled the state prior to the death of the Living Buddha, in 1924, did not give up its power without a bitter struggle.

The Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (a member of the Comintern), which today runs the government, found it necessary to shoot the premier in 1922, the commander in chief of the army in 1924 and numerous lesser luminaries in 1928, who the government's drive to socialize Mongolian economy resulted in a series of popular uprisings and a wholesale slaughter of cattle by their owners. The war minister, Demid, died of poisoning on a train taking him to Moscow in 1937. Following his death, Japanese papers claimed that he was a member of a huge Japanese spy web, covering the entire Soviet Far East.

When the calamitous results of the "swing leftward" of 1928 became apparent, there was a swing back to a moderate course. Premier Amor in 1934 declared that his country, while a bourgeois one, is an anti-imperialist republic, all power in which belongs not to bourgeoisie but to toiling nomads. The war on capitalism, he added, is designed not to bring the country into a state of socialism, but to prepare Mongolia for transition into a noncapitalist state.

Of Outer Mongolia's population of 900,000 (of whom 88 per cent are Mongols), about 70,000 are lamas. In this huge malcontented section, as well as among the dispossessed princes and feudal lords, Japan's agents today find ready tools to carry out their plots. As long as this powerful discontented stratum remains, Outer Mongolia will continue in social turmoil.

Labor's New 'Trustee'

By Ernest K. Lindley

Capable Mr. Leiserson

THE NATIONAL Mediation Board is extraordinary, if not unique, in one respect. It is an agency of the Federal Government which has no lawyer on its staff. William M. Leiserson, its chairman, who has just been drafted by the President for a transfer to the National Labor Relations Board, dislikes heartily the legalistic approach to labor problems.

Recently, before anyone suspected that he could be pried out of his relatively comfortable job as overseer of labor relations in the railroad industry, he was invited to talk to the lawyers' union in the National Labor Relations Board. He declined, saying that if it had been a union against lawyers he might have accepted. His reply was intended as a jestful exaggeration of his well-known attitude toward the legal profession, but there was a vein of seriousness in it thick enough to make the lawyers, with which the NLRB is plentifully endowed, feel somewhat anxious when they learned that, the Senate willing, he is to become one of their bosses.

Likes To Put Dent In Legal Precedent

MR. LEISERSON prides himself on being a practical man. He would cheerfully put a dent in a legal precedent in order to get a concrete result. Nobody in the country has had more experience in supervising the practice of collective bargaining. He has always won the confidence of the employers with whom he had dealt, and he is trusted by all branches of labor. He is patient, good-natured and resourceful. He knows something about the operations of several industries and a great deal about the psychology, as well as the problems, of plant managers, shop foremen, union leaders and the rank and file of employes.

The NLRB is run chiefly by lawyers, although its field force includes some people with considerable practical experience in labor relations. Why there are so many lawyers in the organization is quite understandable. The NLRB has no powers to conciliate, mediate or arbitrate labor disputes. Its first duty is to protect a right: the right of labor to organize freely without any kind of interference from the employer. Its further duty is to promote the practice of collective bargaining.

At the very outset the whole national labor relations act was assailed as unconstitutional. For almost two years the chief job of the NLRB was to establish its right to exist. Every step that it took had to be taken with a view to a test of its powers in the courts.

Defended NLRB Act As Sound Legislation

THE NLRB has suffered a few setbacks in the courts, but on the whole its legal strategy and tactics have been guided with remarkable skill, and since the basic decisions of the Supreme Court almost two years ago, genuine collective bargaining has spread.

Mr. Leiserson undoubtedly will try to make the NLRB less of a prosecutor and judge and more of a positive force. He will be only one member of a board of three—assuming that the board is not enlarged by Congress. But he is a strong man with great prestige, and he has been called upon by the President to take the NLRB in hand. The NLRB is too insecure to resist him, even it is wished to do so.

Mr. Leiserson has consistently defended the present national labor relations act as a sound piece of legislation. It doesn't provide any specific legal basis for the exercise of his own talents as a mediator and arbitrator. But he will be sure to try to bring into the organization—in Washington and in the field—more men with practical experience in labor relations.

Sought To Dodge NLRB Position

PROBABLY no one is unhappier about his appointment to the NLRB than Mr. Leiserson himself. He was asked to take the chairmanship of the Labor Relations Board which preceded the present one—he had been secretary of the original National Labor Board under Senator Wagner in the early NRA days. But he preferred strongly his job on the National Mediation Board. Another attempt to lasso him for the NLRB—the present one—was made in 1935. But he pleaded successfully that he should be allowed to remain as chairman of the National Mediation Board until it was functioning smoothly. Railroad management and labor both wanted him to stay.

When he was approached this time he made a similar plea—and it was again supported by railroad management and labor. But the President insisted that, as a national service, he move to the NLRB.

It remains uncertain whether Mr. Leiserson's appointment will stop the movement to amend the national labor relations act and reorganize the board by law. But there is no doubt that Mr. Leiserson can give both the act and the board a new flavor—one which should make them more palatable to the general public and to employers who are really ready to bargain collectively.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

The Fateful Decision Of Britain

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to grasp, on first thought, the full significance of what has happened in Great Britain. It amounts to hardly less than a social revolution. And it its difficult to believe that whether there is actual armed conflict or its only alternative—a prolonged crisis looking toward a negotiated international settlement—the social order will ever again be quite what it was in the birthplace of political freedom and the home of the mother of parliaments. For the processes of history are rarely reversed, however much they may be modified.

The British government is adopting conscription and establishing a ministry of supply, which together mean nothing less than the total mobilization of the nation's resources—its man power, its industries, its capital and its labor.

The proposed budget is staggering. It amounts to £1,322,000,000, or about $6,500,000,000. Considering that the British population is about one-third of ours this is the equivalent of a $19,000,000,000 American budget. It represents a full third of the total British national income.

Britain Resorts To Spartan Taxes

FURTHERMORE, it is to be raised chiefly by taxation—by increased rates on motorcars, tobacco, sugar; and by higher death duties and surtaxes. The Athens of Europe is subjecting itself to Spartan measures.

The tax on automobiles jumps by 66 2-3 per cent. It means that the owner of a Ford will pay $185 yearly. It may discourage the manufacture of automobiles in favor of armaments. Income tax goes up 5 per cent from its present high level on incomes between $10,000 and $40,000 and 10 per cent for those above.

There are several reasons for this. One is necessity. International capitalism is in no such blooming condition as it was in 1914. There are no such sources of savings and international credit; no expectation of great international loans.

But perhaps the more important reason is the enormously increased democratization of Great Britain in the last generation and the increased sense of social justice.

The method of credit inflation and war profits will not be tolerated side by side with the conscription of men's lives, in the face of more hazardous risks for the whole population, including women and children, than ever before.

The modern war is total war, from which no class, no group, even no age is wholly exempted. Great Britain and France face states that have been totally mobilized for years. There is no other alternative, if they are to be faced, than the one Great Britain has taken, of facing totality with totality.

National Socialism With Vast Differences

ON FIRST THOUGHT, one will say—this IS the totalitarian state. Granted that the emergency forced it; granted that there was no alternative—this is national socialism.

But it is national socialism with prodigious differences. The unity which has been enforced upon the Germans by a new mystic of the state, accompanied there by the terrorism of a vast secret police, the substitution of courts of justice by star chamber party proceedings, the ruthless combing out of political and racial minorities, and a personal-party dictatorship, has formed itself in Great Britain out of the greatest emergency in British history since the Norman Conquest, out of the clear realization that Britain, whose navy and geography have assured her isolation for centuries, is today, in the era of the airplane, one of the most vulnerable of all nations—40-odd million people on an island, within a bombing distance from the continent that can be reckoned in minutes.

Unlike Germany, England has the oldest existing tradition of political liberty. It is deeply Christian. The class struggle has never reached on British soil the proportions which it reached in Germany. The measures now adopted are taken wholly for the defense of the British Isles, the French Republic and the small nations of the continent.

Seen More Imposing Because of Reluctance

AND THE POPULAR spirit which supports them has come reluctantly, the more imposing because of its reluctance, out of hostility to the basic SPIRIT of Nazism—its terror, its persecutions, its suppression of all free thought, its cynical contempt for the word and the signed treaty, and its open justification of aggression. These facts MUST influence the course of British action, if Britain is to keep the unity she now has.

The British conscription will call men for six months' training, whereupon they enter the territorial reserves. There will be exemptions for individuals, or anticipation or postponement of training when good cause is shown, conscientious objectors will be exempted, provided they undertake other work of national importance. The liberal and labor oppositions will continue to function as modifying influences.

And the British government will continue to press for negotiations and peace. But it is no longer in the position it was in at Munich. There will not be another dictated peace.

The morale in Britain and France at this moment is very impressive, inestimably better than the morale in Germany.

Germans Troubled By Czech Conquest

THE CONQUEST of Czecho-Slovakia is not popular in Germany. The Germans are not Huns and savages. They are people with deeply troubled souls. The strength of Hitler has been the moral strength of the German sense of injustices done them. By every injustice that Hitler himself has done to others—by the betrayal of the Austrians—even of the Austrian Nazis—by the compounded betrayal of Munich, by the treacherous theft of a whole nation which every German knows is in no sense German—he has enormously augmented his war reserves, but he has demoralized his own people. And therewith he has weakened his greatest reserve.

The terror inside Germany has steadily increased since Czecho-Slovakia, and the reason is plain. The November pogroms, the conquest of Prague in March, the sudden revealing of his hand in the ultimatums to Poland and Rumania, have revolted thousands of Germans.

It is a great mistake to underrake the power of ideas in this world. They raise regiments when reason and self-interest fail; they demobilize peoples as well as mobilize them.

The moral force behind Hitler inside and outside of Germany was opposition to the Versailles Treaty. It is spent the moment the victim becomes the victimizer.

The spirit of revenge in Germany has long since been dissipated on the persecution of German dissenters and Jews. The bad conscience of the rest of the world about the Versailles Treaty, which has been Hitler's strongest foreign ally, disappears at the prospect of another Versailles Treaty, and a more ruthless one.

Thoughtful Germans know this. In German universities, selected groups of students are being told by their teachers that the taking of Czecho-Slovakia was contrary to national socialist policy, and was a crime that history will have to make good to clear the name of the German people. And men are going to concentration camps for saying this kind of thing.

U. S. Still Willing To Arbitrate Points

THE STRONGEST part of President Roosevelt's plea to Hitler and Mussolini are the words: "I refuse to believe that the world is, of necessity, a prisoner of destiny." He made a clear, constructive proposal that if the governments now mobilized in their totality lay aside their guns to arbitrate their differences, the government of the United States will take part in the discussions looking toward a more practical manner of opening up the trade channels of the world and reorganizing its economy.

Hitler has not yet made his speech as these lines are written. But if, with every channel open for the obtaining of justice for Germany and for everybody else, including Czecho-Slovakia, and but one concession asked—the abandonment by every one of aggression or the threat of aggression—if with this alternative Hitler moves toward war, he will have lost his mind. It would be better for his place in history if he should lose his life.

Day's Negotiations On Coal End Without Result

New York, April 27 (AP).—Operators and union leaders in anthracite and bituminous industries completed another day of negotiations calculated to forestall a threatened national coal shutdown.

Soft coal operators continued in deadlock with C. I. O. and United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis—the issue still being retention of the strike-lockout two-way "penalty clause"—and Chief Federal Labor Mediator Dr. John Steelman said simply the situation looked "slightly hopeful."

The hard coal operators, who have been negotiating since April 18 on a contract to replace the one expiring May 5, continued their deliberations, with Lewis attending for the first time.

Mayor LaGuardia said "there will be a crisis in New York City in 48 hours" unless the soft coal impasse was resolved.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Radio-Baseball Fan

Once I sat in the bleachers,
Out in the red, hot sun—
Sweated with every pitcher—
Winced at the cry, "Strike one!"
Now I keep cool and cozy,
Free from the urge to go,
Getting each pitch and bat crack
Over the radio.

II

None of the subway battle,
None of the frenzied fight,
Trying to get a ticket
Where I can see all right;
Merely a nice, big sofa,
Close to a broadcast clear . . .
You can do all the rooting—
I'll take the game by ear.

III

Windup and pitch and verdict,
Batting and fielding dope—
I get it all delivered
Free with a spiel on soap;
Two-bagger, three or homer,
Each with descriptions neat,
Come as I sip a lager,
Home in my stockinged feet.

IV

Rally or airtight fielding,
Homers or grounders weak,
Hair-raising plays or fumbles—
(Hark to the oil man speak!)
Wild game or pitchers' battle,
Strike-out or hit or pass—
I'll get the details quickly,
Free with a talk on gas.

V

Riot or peaceful contest,
Melees or just rough gab;
Brilliant and scintillating,
Tiresome, dull or drab;
Fielding that's simply awful,
Playing that's bad or good—
I get it now with glowing Talks on a breakfast food.

VI

Hasten the television!
Broadcast the pictures, too,
So I can see the "hotdogs"
Just as the rooters do;
Great as the broadcast may be,
Medium, dull or hot,
How I'd react to seeing
Mustard and brush and pot!

VII

Bring on that television!
Boy, I could rise and cheer,
Watching a fellow scraping
Foam from a stein of beer!
Voices and sounds are pleasing,
Stirring and fun, it's true . . .
Still with a ball game broadcast,
I'd like some peanuts, too!

Traffic Case Of Ex-Diplomat To Test Immunity

Traffic Court Judge Walter J. Casey is expected to rule today on the length of diplomatic immunity enjoyed by employes of foreign governments after leaving their positions.

The point was raised in court yesterday when Vinard L. Paris, 29, who recently ended five years of service under the late Ambassador Hirosi Saito, of Japan, was arraigned on ten charges of violating traffic regulations. He pleaded diplomatic immunity on all counts except one, which occured March 22 after he left the embassy's service. The other charges ranged from November, 1937.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Milton D. Korman contended the defendant is now liable to prosecution on all the counts since he is no longer in diplomatic service. Judge Casey took the case under consideration.

Throng Dares Drizzle, Sees Miss Garner Crowned Va. Apple Queen

Colorful Rites Warm Rain-Soaked 15,000

Pageant With 1,000 Students Follows Coronation at Winchester Festival; Huge Parade Set for Today

By Scott Hart.
A Staff Correspondent.

Winchester, Va., April 27.—The pretty brunette granddaughter of Vice President Garner sent her Texas drawl through a slight drizzle today in the affirmation of an oath that made her Queen Shenandoah XVI, sovereign of Virginia's blossoming apple realm.

She walked beside Gov. Price from the door of Handley High School to a golden throne that overlooked an estimated 5,000 persons, packed in chairs and on the sloping hillsides around the big stadium.

Garner's granddaughter wore a sweeping white dress and a gold cape, and showed a composure beyond her 16 years. At times the slight rain moved across her face and the deep eyes that kept fixed on the sweep of landscape that stopped on the Blue Ridge, 20 miles away, her kingdom's end.

The coronation of the sixteenth queen of the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival began in the drizzle; and the opening day of the two-day celebration—which will flash a big parade of 'blossoms petals' through the streets tomorrow—began under the threats of rain.

In the early day, and as the morning passed, the downtown streets of Winchester seemed about normal. There was little crowd. The constant threats of bad weather were keeping them from here, said the festival officials, hesitating to estimate how many had come.

Fifteen thousand would have been a good guess, possibly the smallest opening day attendance in the history of the festivals.

Festival officials placed the entire blame for lack of the usual vast attendance on the weather. No one here thinks that the festival popularity is waning. On the contrary, many look to tomorrow to produce a crowd the equal of past years.

The parade always brings them in, rain or shine, they said. And the parade this year is up to past standards. Dozens of floats, dripping apple blossoms, are in a shed here, ready for the moving tomorrow. The number of bands and uniformed bodies equals those of last year. Everything is favorable but the weather at this moment. But the parade will move, let come what may, the officials state.

Colorful Ceremony

The coronation highlighted today. The crowds began filing into the stadium before 2 p. m. At 3 o'clock, two V. M. I. cadets blew several shrill blasts from golden trumpets. This signalled out the V. M. I. Glee Club, gray-uniformed boys in tall, stiff shakos, who stepped to the center of the steps and swung away in two files that brought them down the sides to the front of the stadium.

They sang the song, "On Great Lone Hills," and at the close the Massanutten cadets walked out with the 30 princesses in long pink dresses.

The ritual that made the Texas girl queen of Virginia's valley applelands was very brief. It was simply a matter of answering a few very rhetorical questions from the Rev. E. T. Clarke, the "prelate of the church." The queen only has to affirm that she will rule wisely and with justice and will see that the kingdom of the apple blossom, during her reign, will have the accommodation and pleasure of her smile.

Drawls Her Pledge

Asked, in effect, if she was prepared to assume such responsibility, Miss Garner said "I will" in such a honey-dripping drawl as never went through a loud speaker before.

"Y-e-s-h man, she will! cried a well-oiled apple blossom celebrator loudly from the sidelines.

There was no hesitancy and no indecision about Miss Garner in accepting the responsibility. She accepted it like a Texas pony takes a bridle bit. And the crowd acclaimed her for her poise. The crowd talked about her, saying they wondered how a 16-year-old could preserve so handsome a calm; could accept even a figurative responsibility so emphatically and charmingly.

And acept it even when the police, who numbered dozens, had allowed photographers to take her picture and the flashlights were popping around her and the band was playing "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You." Many stout Texans break up under nothing more than the song.

Garners Are Onlookers

Watching her were her mother, Mrs. Tully Garner; Mrs. John N. Garner, her grandmother, and Miss Frances Jennings, principal of Arlington Hall, where the queen goes to school.

When the Governor had said, "I present to you Miss Genevieve Garner, from the broad lands of Texas," and had placed an adequate crown on her brown hair, Miss Garner walked down the steps and along a strip of white cloth to another throne, where she watched 1,000 Handley school children in a pageant full of tumbling humpty-dumpties, Jacks and Jills and old women who lived in crowded conditions, in shoes.

This was just the middle of the day for an apple blossom queen. Earlier Miss Garner had gone with all her princesses to the orchards, where the rains, remarkably, have done little damage to the full blooms. From there, she went to a luncheon; to the coronation and, in the evening, to a dance for the princesses.

Tomorrow she must be the central attraction in the big parade, and she may look tonight at the firemen's parade, that, for the first time, will feature a procession of mummers.

The Governor of Virginia had a busy day. Arriving in the morning, he went to the home of State Senator T. Russell Cather, and from there to a stag dinner, given in honor of distinguished visitors, at the Winchester Golf Club. With him on the trip here was Col. William M. Kemper, of Richmond. From the valley came former Gov. Westmoreland Davis.

Festival officials hesitate a prediction on the crowd for tomorrow, but say that with fair weather, the number should range above 25,000.

Va. Board Orders Patients Removed From 'Firetraps'

Richmond, Va., April 27 (AP).—The State Hospital Board today ordered the evacuation of approximately 100 patients from the Taylor Building at the Eastern State Hospital at Williamsburg and the cancellation of all moving picture shows in Cameron Hall.

A report from the insurance underwriters to the board described the Taylor Building as a "very definite fire hazard" and said Cameron Hall used as a chapel and for the showing of motion pictures, was "dangerous" in that it was built entirely of wood and had only one entrance.

The underwriter's report said removal of patients on the top three floors of the four-story structure had been ordered as long as five years ago.

Capital Area Rail Service Cut Asked

Revenue Drop Cited On Charlottesville To D. C. Trains

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 27.—The State corporation commission heard and took under advisement today the first of a series of Southern Railway Co. petitions for authority to discontinue local service passenger trains.

The petition heard today asked permission to remove trains Nos. 15, 16 and 7, now operated between Charlottesville and Washington, on which the company contended it was losing about $45,000 a year.

Objectors to curtailing the present Charlottesville-Washington service testified that the present service was needed. J. T. Blincoe, representing the board of supervisors of Fairfax County, said communities of northern Virginia needed a train service that would permit residents to go to Washington in the morning and return to their homes at night. He did not oppose directly the removal of 15 and 16, which now provide service in each direction, but said provision should be made to take care of patrons of these trains.

Among others objecting to discontinuance of the service were J. B. Robinson, of Burk; R. R. Buckley, of Clifton Station; E. S. Hooker, of Nokesville; Miss Sarah Donahoe, of Manassas, and W. M. Johnson, who filed a petition signed by Manassas residents urging retention of the present setup.

Another petition pertaining to service in northern Virginia was filed today by the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad for authority to discontinue trains 2, 9 and 400 on its 60-mile electric line from Alexandria to Bluemont. The petition will be heard May 19.

Advice of Food

'Fluff Juffs' May Accompany Spring Salad
Wholesome Menu for Children's Party Suggested Gelatin Trick Will Keep Whipped Cream Stiff

"FLUFF JUFFS" may sound queer to some homemakers but they are really quite a delicacy. The recipe for these crunchy, crisp delectables is being published since one of our readers asked for an accompaniment to a spring salad or a bowl of soup. These fluffs are so simple to make it's hard to believe, yet they have all the attributes of fancy puff paste. The added reason for their appeal is that they are rolled in finely ground nut meats the minute they come out of the hot fat. Here is the way they are made:

Fluff Juffs

Sift soft wheat flour and measure 2 cups; add 1 teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons baking powder and sift together. Cut 2 to 4 tablespoons shortening in the mixture. Add 5 tablespoons milk and make stiff dough. Roll very thin and cut into strips ½ inch by 1½ inches. Chill. Drop into deep, hot fat, 375 degrees. Remove from kettle when golden brown, drain and roll in powdered nut meats to which salt has been added. May be served hot or cold.

Child's Party

Birthday parties are an event in a child's life. Mrs. Irma C. Brand, 2733 Connecticut avenue northwest, has asked us to help her plan the food for her small daughter's birthday party. The following is a suggested menu for the party. If the imagination is used in preparing the sandwiches and the fruit sticks it can be worked into a lovely color scheme.

Birthday Party Menu

Sandwiches — Fruit Sticks
Ice Cream — Birthday Cake
Orangeade — Chocolate Drink
Candies

The following recipe will make a delicious, wholesome birthday cake for small children.

Boiled Sponge Cake

Cook 1¼ cups sugar and 1 cup water to 235 degrees or soft ball stage. Pour over the beaten whites of 6 eggs. Beat until cool, add the 6 beaten egg yolks and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Fold in 1 cup cake flour which has been sifted with ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon cream tartar. Preheat oven to 325 degrees and bake for 1 hour.

To make miracle icing, mix 1½ cups sugar with 1-3 cup water. Cool after boiling for 3 minutes.

Place 2 unbeaten egg whites and ¼ teaspoon cream of tartar and ⅛ teaspoon salt in mixing bowl. Beat fast and immediately add hot syrup. Continue to beat for 5 minutes. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Spread on cake. This is a soft frosting, does not become crusty. May add 6 marshmallows to the hot syrup. Allow to dissolve before adding to the egg whites.

Helpful Hint

"There is a way to keep whipped cream 'whipped' so that you can do it hours ahead," writes Mrs. Ida Maisel, 1416 Parkwood place northwest. Sprinkle 1 teaspoon granulated gelatin on 1 tablespoon cold water in a small dish. Melt over hot water by setting the dish in a large shallow pan of boiling water. Add to the cream and beat until quite stiff. Add sugar and vanilla and blend. This cream will keep stiff for 24 hours in the refrigerator.

Delicate Dessert

Mrs. Mary Duffy, 409 Park avenue, Baltimore, writes that she is interested in the delicately flavored stalk, rhubarb. Rhubarb is a food especially designed for spring and contrasts temptingly with the richer desserts of winter. Its texture is delicate and the pink color is springlike. Rhubarb chiffon tarts are nice to serve on spring menus. To give an added touch bake the tart shells in fluted tart pans.

Rhubarb Chiffon Tarts

Cook 2 pounds rhubarb, cut in 1-inch pieces, until tender. Drain, beat pulp with a spoon until smooth. Beat egg yolks and sugar until light and fluffy. Add the rhubarb. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Fill baked tart shells and place in slow oven, 325 degrees, until firm, about 30 minutes.

Household Hints

In preparing Welsh rabbits be careful not to over-cook them or they will become stringy.

A soap jelly suitable for laundering clothes can be made by putting leftover soap bits in a jar and covering them with boiling water.

Always wipe off the clothes line with a damp cloth before hanging up the laundry. This prevents dirt from staining the clothes.

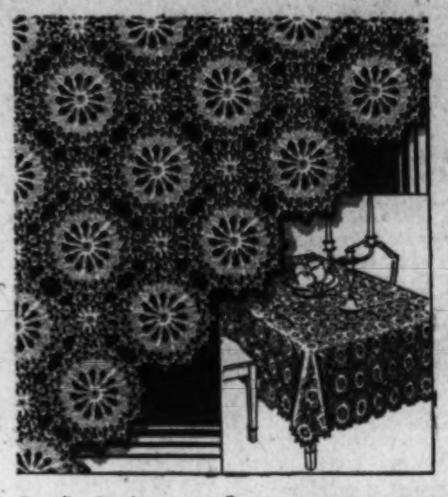
Light colored knitted woolen clothes require frequent launderings.

Remember, only crisp crackers or wafers should be served with soups, salads or cheese. Often crackers in a fresh box need reheating for 5 minutes in moderate oven.

Mayonnaise should be stored in covered jars on the upper shelf of the refrigerator, since it is likely to separate if it is kept in the coldest section.

If there are several children in the family, rotate their tasks each week to stimulate a little competitive spirit.

Easily Memorized Medallions Make Beautiful Cloth or Scarf



By Alice Brooks.

THESE EASILY memorized medallions, so rich in design, are truly the needlewoman's treasure. They are lovely individually, but their real beauty and laciness can be appreciated more fully after they have been joined into a cloth, spread or scarf. Crochet these medallions of mercerized string. Easy to handle, they make perfect pick-up work. Pattern 6298 contains instructions for making medallions; an illustration of them and of stitches; photographs of medallions; materials needed.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in coin to The Washington Post, Household Arts Department, 259 West Fourteenth street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

Batch of Dough Offers Possibilities

Shaping yeast dough into various kinds of rolls is fun and the results are pleasing. The same roll dough will make a dozen kind of rolls. A basketfull of roll varieties accompanying the meal speaks of pleasant luxury, yet luxury which costs no more than a few minutes of the cook's time.

Bowknot rolls are especially attractive to serve on tea trays for their appearance is dainty and they seem to go so well with butter and marmalade. To make them, roll out yeast dough about ¼ inch thick and cut in strips ½ inch wide and 6 inches long. Tie each strip in a knot.

Recipe for Boneless Baked Shad

A shad does not come "boned" but through this process of cooking, the bones simply melt away and the finished product is most delicious.

Place the shad on a rack in a roasting pan which is sufficiently high to allow for two to three cups of water below the fish, as fish must not touch the water. Cover and bake in an oven at 325 degrees F. for five hours. Baste frequently and just before serving, remove the cover and let it brown. The long cooking causes the bones to literally "melt away."

Add a small piece of bay leaf, a slice of onion, a slice of lemon with peeling left on and a small stalk of celery to the water for a tastier fish.

Serve bordered with potatoes and garnish with slices of lemon and parsley.

Onions Are Real Aid To Cooking

Cooks Find Them Not Only Invaluable in Seasoning but Also An Aid to Digestion

By The Post Food Editor

WHETHER THE family cook operates in her modern kitchen, at a cabin in the woods or a cottage at the seashore, onions, shallots, garlic, chives or some of their pungent relatives are usually among the supplies. These bulbs are invaluable for their many uses in the seasoning and preparation of dishes. They are also stimulating and an aid to digestion.

We do not eat much garlic in America, but it does not take a pure-bred Frenchman or Italian to appreciate its flavor. Anyway, it is not necessary to eat the garlic itself. Garlic water is quite another thing. When a little of it is used in sauce or a soup, you do not taste the garlic at all; you only wonder why the soup is so very good today. To make garlic water, take a garlic bead, peel it, mash it, pour about one-fourth of a pint of boiling water over it and let it stand until quite cold. Strain the liquid through muslin and bottle, using just a few drops for seasoning.

Onions a Real Delicacy

If onions were costly, surely they would be considered a great delicacy. Especially so when the great Bermudas are made into French fries or stuffed onions. Glazed onions are delicious with roast pork; scalloped onions of the large, mild variety combine well with cheese; shoestring onions cut into the thinnest possible shreds are good fried in deep fat; onion shortcake, which is ham-flavored biscuits encasing fried onions, with a hot sauce poured over it, is something to remember.

Onion butter is very useful when you cook for persons who don't like onions or can't digest them. Without onions in one form or another, meat, gravies and soups taste weak and poor. But if you make the onions into a butter, you get the strength of them without the actual flavor. Peel two large onions, slice and reduce to a pulp. Pass through a fine sieve and mix with two tablespoons of butter. When preparing a roast, rub it with a little of the mixture. Put a little, also, around the inside of a fowl or a duck before cooking. Melt a little in your stew pan and stir a teaspoonful or so into the soup. No one will be able to accuse you of cooking with onion, but the hint of flavor will be found one of those important little things that "make all the difference."

Chives, too, one of the more disguised of the clan, are delicious when combined with cottage cheese for salad or with Roquefort in a frozen cheese and chive salad, or as a peppery addition to canapes and for stuffing celery.

Stuffed Onions

Onions stuffed with bread crumbs, sausage meat, ground chicken, fried mushrooms, ground cooked veal, baked in the oven, do not give the household so many obnoxious whiffs. Even if they do smell to high heaven, they are a delicious food.

Select 4 large Bermuda onions which will sit upright. Peel and then boil them for about 40 minutes in salted water (1 teaspoon to 1 quart) or until almost tender when pierced with a fork. Remove from water, drain and cool. Carefully remove part of the onion centers, leaving a wall about ½ inch thick. Chop the centers and add them to ½ cup of the chosen ingredient, 1 tablespoon butter, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Fill the cavities with the mixture and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, in a greased casserole, covered, for 10 minutes. Uncover and continue baking until tops are delicately browned—about 10 minutes more.

Cleaning Hint

Porcelain tubs, bowls and sinks should be washed regularly with hot water containing a little kerosene. Stains made by water containing an excess amount of iron may be removed by scrubbing with a mixture of whiting and oxalic acid in a creamy consistency. Be sure to wash the porcelain free of the acid.

Ungilded Lilies for the Kitchen

The sprightly offshoots of the lily family pictured above pursue both the open and hidden paths of cookery, for they are the natural comcomitants of many foods. Any good cook uses the flavor of onions, chives, shallots, garlic and the rest of the clan in the preparation of numerous dishes

Attic Corner Makes Children A Playroom

Wallboard. Old Rugs And Benches Are Only Furnishings

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"RAINY days used to be the bane of my life," writes Rita L., "because with the children inside, it either meant letting them just about wreck the place or be eternally keeping after them.

"But my husband got the bright idea of an indoor playroom, a place where the children could really do as they pleased. So we cleared away a good big corner of our attic, sealed it up with wall board and finished the rest of the room roughly. My, now our problem is certainly not a bored brood, but the whole neighborhood wants to congregate in our attic. Maybe you think they can't raise a racket! However, I'm so glad they're entertaining themselves that I can bear with the noise very philosophically."

"The secret is partly, of course, due in the fact that practically all bars are down in this playroom. The children can do anything here within the bounds of safety. This idea appeals strongly—the particular point that seems to have caught their imagination is the idea that they can even drive nails into things up here. They boast a lot about that in the neighborhood though actually they do almost no damage with their carpentry.

Decorations 'Just Aren't'

"The main lure of the room is that we have provided an indoor swing, an archery set and a work bench equipped with a good set of tools. We've also strung up a pulley curtain that draws across one end of the room, making a stage of sorts.

"The decorations for this room just aren't . . . we've left the wall board as is and the floors are covered with an assortment of cast-off rugs—for warmth in bad weather and for padding in case of spills. The curtains are hand-me-downs, too, or should I say, hand-me-ups! Benches around the sides of the room and a pile of old cushions provide seating facilities for quite a gang. These benches can be pulled out to make rows when the "theater" is going strong.

May Redecorate Later

"Some day maybe we may paint the walls white and the woodwork red and have an aviation-design chintz for the curtains. I'd thought, too, of a linoleum floor inlaid in shuffle board pattern. But for the time being—while the children are at the rough-house age, I'm going to have things as they are.

"I thought that some of your readers might probably be interested in hearing about the way we've solved a problem that a lot of them might be facing."

Menu Includes Broiled Ham With Mustard Sauce

By The Post Food Editor

IT IS a good thing most people like ham, for it's an "old faithful" in meal planning. In the old days the cook bought a whole ham and served it day after day, the final appearance usually being split-pea soup made from the bone. Today you can buy a single slice of ham, pre-cooked, or take an ever-ready tin of ham from the emergency shelf. The following dinner menu includes broiled ham with mustard sauce.

Dinner Menu

Chilled tomato juice
Broiled ham Mustard sauce
Fried sweet potatoes
Brussels sprouts
Waldorf salad
Gingerbread Coffee

Broile dHam With Mustard Sauce.

Place a slice of thick raw ham in a hot skillet and brown on both sides. Lower heat and cook for five minutes. Remove and keep hot. To the fat in the skillet add 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 1 teaspoon brown sugar and 2 tablespoons grape jelly. Heat well and pour over ham.

White Sauce Improves Chipped Beef, Codfish

There are a few things like chipped beef and codfish that seem to demand a union with white sauce. White sauce when used with discretion and properly made is a splendid food. The only difference between the thin, medium and thick sauces is in the amounts of fat and flour. Of course, there are variations in which cream is used in place of milk, or fish, meat or vegetable stock is substituted.

To make thin white sauce use 1 tablespoon fat, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 cup milk, ¼ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Medium white sauce is 2 tablespoons fat and 2 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk and the same amount of seasonings. Thick white sauce is 3 to 4 tablespoons fat, 3 to 4 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk and the same amount of seasonings as for the thin sauce.

Coffee May Give Zest to Wide Variety of Dishes, Recipes Entered in Post Contest Demonstrate

Pudding Suggestion Wins First Prize, Chiffon Pie Gets Second Place

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

SUCH AN EXPRESSION as "I love coffee" isn't news to anybody. For ages coffee has been in high favor as a beverage because of its delectable flavor and pleasing aroma. But coffee also can be a very well behaved ingredient when incorporated into other foods. Like mushrooms, coffee further enriches food without overshadowing the flavor of the food foundation. It can really be a right-hand conniver of the busy meal-maker who wants to vary her dishes.

Tricks with coffee as suggested by The Post food readers, recall the words of the poet who said, "And oh! what lovely beautiful eating there is in this world." This assortment of recipes using coffee as the flavoring ingredient provides a fascinating culinary adventure for food page readers.

Coffee Leads Double Life

Mrs. Julia B. O'Connell, 53 Todd place northeast, winner of the first prize of $3 in this week's recipe contest added coffee to an old, faithful dish and it emerged with a lifted face and a new lease on life. The coffee pudding recipe is one recommended for your dessert file.

Coffee Pudding

Cream 1 cup butter and 2 cups sugar. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and 6 egg yolks, one at a time. Beat all thoroughly. Add 1 cup lukewarm coffee. Mix well. Line a shallow pan with lady fingers. Pour the mixture over the lady fingers. Sprinkle with 1 cup blanched almonds. Let stand overnight. Cut in squares and serve with whipped cream.

Pie Co-stars With Pudding

In the good old competitive spirit of a constant Post food reader came a recipe from Mrs. Mary Mayer, 228 Homewood terrace, Baltimore, who wins the second prize of $2 with her coffee technique. Mrs. Mayer's recipe suggests toothsome deliciousness for those who like both pie and coffee, for it is truly a two-in-one dish.

Mrs. Mayer

Coffee Chiffon Pie

Prepare a 9-inch baked pie shell. Soak 2 tablespoons gelatine in ½ cup cold water. Dissolve it in 2 cups hot coffee. Stir in ½ cup sugar and pour over 2 well beaten egg yolks. Cook and stir in a double boiler until thick. Cool until about to set. Beat until fluffy with a wire whisk. Add 1 teaspoon vanila. Whip 1 cup heavy cream until stiff. Fold into it 1 tablespoon sugar. Whip 2 egg whites with ⅛ teaspoon salt until stiff and fold the whipped cream into the coffee mixture. Then fold in the egg whites. Pour the filling into the pie shell and chill thoroughly before serving it.

Spicy News

A new cake recipe in a class by itself, rich in the flavor and fragrance of coffee and spices is the one submitted by Mrs. C. H. Galliher, 7701 Georgia avenue northwest. Mrs. Galliher wins a $1 prize for her contribution as the spice and coffee-flavored cake is unusual in the cake category.

Mrs. Galliher

Spice Cake

Beat a cup of shortening until light and creamy; add 1 cup sugar gradually. Add 3 beaten egg yolks, working them in thoroughly. Next add ½ cup strong black coffee alternately with 1 2-3 cups flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons baking powder and 1½ teaspoons ground mixed spices, which have been sifted twice. Fold in 3 beaten egg whites beaten until dry. Bake 30 minutes in moderate oven, 350-400 degrees, in a shallow oiled and floured pan. Sprinkle the top with granulated sugar before baking.

New Flavor Twist

The souffle is a simple and useful everyday dish, but it digresses to something else for special occasions when it appears as a coffee souffle. Mrs. Augusta N. T. Wafle, 3228 Hiatt place northwest, winner of a prize, shares a recipe which was a favorite with Mrs. Calvin Coolidge.

Coffee Souffle

Mix 1½ cups strong coffee with 1 tablespoon gelatine and ½ cup milk. Heat in a double boiler and add 3 egg yolks slightly beaten and mixed with 1-3 cup sugar and ¼ teaspoon salt. Cook mixture until it thickens, then add 3 beaten egg whites and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Mold and chill. Serve with whipped cream.

Still Coffee but Different

"Gather the cup that remains that nothing be lost" might well be the starting point of the maple coffee ice cream, for which Miss S. E. Boswell, 1931 Calvert street northwest, gives an interesting recipe. This recipe wins a $1 prize and is one that bridge clubbers might well note.

Maple Coffee Ice Cream

Combine 1 cup maple sirup and ¼ teaspoon salt, and cook over hot water for 5 minutes. Pour mixture over 2 slightly beaten egg whites, stirring constantly. Cook until mixture coats a spoon. Cool and pour into refrigerator tray. Partially freeze and then fold in stiffly whipped evaporated milk and freeze until firm.

Shad, Seasonal and Low-Priced, Advised for Thrifty Housewife

By The Post Food Editor.

"KEEPING UP with the Jones" follows clear to the dinner plate. But anyone can keep up with the Joneses and still eat economically if attention is given to the many week-end specials in the groceries and markets. Shad is one item whose present low price should be appreciated. It is now plentiful in the nearby waters and Washington is fortunate in having fish direct from the water. Freshness is the all-important quality and the flavor is best when fresh from the water. The following is a splendid way of cooking shad to dissolve the numerous bones:

BONELESS BAKED SHAD

Place shad in roasting pan on a rack sufficiently high to allow 2 or 3 cups of water below fish. Water must not touch fish. Cover and bake 5 hours at 325 degrees. Baste frequently. Remove cover just before serving to brown. Add a piece of bay leaf, a slice of onion, a slice of lemon with peel and a stalk of celery to water for flavoring.

The present price of veal makes it sweet picking. Veal, boned and rolled, is delicious for the Sunday dinner and any left over can lead to stews, curried with rice, and other good dishes, at small cost. They add a broad margin to the food dollar. The world is full of a number of delicious foods and in this category comes capons, so distinctive of flavor and quality. Capons are being offered at an interesting price for the week end.

Asparagus Plentiful

The hotter weather has brought asparagus along with a bang. It is plentiful and at reasonable prices. There are the long slender willowy spears and the supercolossal ones. The beneficial greens such as mustard greens, chicory, escarole, spinach and kale are all abundant. And don't forget the package of cheese which is grand for dressing up many vegetables. Chilled greens, with a hot bacon dressing is delicious; escallop tender young dandelion greens; cream a dish of chicory and steam Swiss chard and dress with Hollandaise. Cook tender little beets diced in their own bright greens. Fresh peas hit a new low this week. The green color and flavor make peas a fine vegetable to accompany the chosen meat dish. Try making "salmon wiggle" using fresh peas for a Sunday night supper dish.

Orange juice, always a breakfast favorite, has a definite rival in canned pineapple juice. It comes in 46-ounce cans for a nominal price. To the late sleeper it is a blessing and with the blessing come the necessary vitamins.

Here's an Egg Dessert

No matter if you are an independent soul who dislikes to be told what to eat—to eat more eggs is good advice, for they are of top quality and and very low priced. Eat more of these egg bargains in hot desserts of the dainty souffle type; eggs baked with cheese; curried eggs with mushrooms; stuffed eggs for salads; egg volcanoes, coddled and shirred. A baked chocolate souffle is a tantalizing finish to a meal, black and sweet and not the least heavy.

Red Flannel Hash Is Delicious

Red Flannel Hash

Chop cold vegetables in a bowl. Mix lightly and season. Use enough chopped beets to give a red color. Saute in a skillet until brown.

If you want to get a meal in short time, serve the hash, cold corned beef, horseradish sauce and a cucumber and tomato salad. Dutch apple pie and coffee would round out this meal.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Skirts Reach Highest Point Since 1928 Cobina Wright, Jr., Wins Glamour Spotlight Former Anna Gould Joins Widows' Colony

New York, April 27.

LOOKING DOWNWARD, after yanking our befuddled eyes from the immensity of the Trylon and Perisphere (you know, the Needle and the Basketball), we find them fall with a thud on (1) the short skirts which barely kiss the knees shoes.

It is a fashion truism to restate that the shorter the skirts, the more attention and (2) the feminine footwear gets. And now, in this year of no grace, with skirt hemlines at their high since '28, we discover that we had best be mighty careful about what covers our tootsies during the months ahead. Obviously, we must also be careful that our stockings are runless and that their seams are straight. People are going to look at us down there—they can't help it any more than we can.

ALICE HUGHES

History repeats itself, even in this madhouse. Last year "Mimi" Baker went around the world, and Esme O'Brien replaced her as top eye-grabber among the younger cafe society set. Now Cobina Wright, jr., loveliest of the lot, suddenly seems to take the spot held all winter by the little Frazier girl. Seems to take two of these junior cuties to make a season here, Brenda, one fears, has been much overpublicized, doesn't one? Or doesn't one give a toot? . . .

THE DUCHESS DE TALLEYRAND, who used to be one of the local girls as Anna Gould, has joined the sizable and colorful colony of rich widows who live at the dear and famous Plaza Hotel, on the southern rim of Central Park. The Plaza's flunkeys are all well-trained to handle these bundles of transplanted American nobility. Such bowing!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Last minute bulletins from The Battle of Flushing Meadows, sometimes called "The World's Fair." Boss Grover Whalen has been down sick with a bad cold—and right at this time. Latest entrant in the Art and Culture movement—the very shapely Della Carrell has been signed to do a "rose dance" in NTG's Congress of Beauty on the show grounds. Maybe this will hearten the boys a bit. Too bad I can't print a picture of her here "in costume," which consists of two yards of beads and a few feathery frills!

Just a hint of the eye-treats in store . . . Music will abound. Orchestral concerts will be in order all season, as well as noted soloists of all kinds. Grace Moore will warble on May 21, for instance . . . The American doughnut industry will get a big play at the fair. Dunking the dear old cruller will be welcome, not vulgar, at two fancy spots on the grounds. They are hoping to make the great American doughnut as outstanding at the local show as the ice cream cone was at the St. Louis Fair 35 years ago—where it was first introduced.

ANOTHER INNER treat to be introduced in the East for the first time will be Nectarine Sherbet, long a West Coast delicacy. It's a peach product, pale green in color . . . Handsome men and beautiful young women, in distinctive uniforms, will be a feature of the grounds—as guides and information-givers, not to mention demonstrators of all kinds. Hundreds of girls have been receiving intensive training for months . . . Thirty beauties from the Scandinavian countries will preside at their exhibit. These girls all live together in a big specially-rented house near the grounds.

We are justly proud of our handsome, courteous and gallant cops. A special precinct has been opened near the fair grounds, staffed by 800 smart and good-looking young rookies under John J. Sullivan. Add to these the 400 picked troops of the Regular Army who will be in camp in the grounds, and you have a whole Hollywood of charmers in uniform. Yes, Father, I'm not forgetting the pretty little girls. The fair's fun spot will feature hundreds—one of the loveliest being Eleanor Holm, the swimming lady who stars in Billy Rose's Aquacade. But you try to keep your mind on culture!

LOOK OUT for fair feet—the curse of every such show. Wear comfortable shoes—and soak the tootsies in cold water every night. I'll se e you at Flushing—any way now!

Perfect New Dance Steps

POPULAR is the girl whose dancing makes her stand out from the crowd. While others shuffle along, her smooth stepping tells the stag line she knows what smart dances, such as the rumba, are all about.

Dance a little apart from your partner. Hold arms close to the body.

Soap and Water Bring Spring's Freshness to Home

Spring means cleaning—crisp, fresh curtains at windows, blankets away for the summer, washable rugs freshened. Every homemaker wants such cleanliness, but she does not always get it.

Any material that is tub-fast may be washed. Any fabric not guaranteed tub-fast should be tested before washing by trying out a clipping or an inconspicuous corner in a little soapy warm water.

Wash draperies and glass curtains in lukewarm water with mild soapsuds. Rinse three times in water the same temperature. The household washer is ideal for such cleansing. Hang the curtains to dry in the shade. Dampen before ironing. If you are using an ironer, do French pleats last, over the end of the ironer. Set it for "warm" when you are pressing panel glass curtains and hang them while they are slightly damp, with a rod stretcher in the bottom hem to hold them straight.

Your Figure Madame!

—By Ida Jean Kain.

Beauty Experts Cannot Furnish Exercise Stand-In

ONCE I MET a woman who said wistfully: "Today I am 40 years old . . . I wish I could put myself in the charge of one of those de luxe beauty salons and be made over from head to toe."

Now, there's a wish any woman can appreciate! And I will freely admit that being able to turn yourself over to someone else has its points. In the first place, if you pay for a revision of your looks, you want to see your money's worth in improvements.

When someone (with a very good figure of her own) goes at you with the tape measure and announces matter-of-factly that your hipline is several inches more than it should be and tells you just how fast you can expect to slim those inches off, you are very apt to do your exercises between then and the next time your measurements are scrutinized. And when you are weighed and found to be 20 to 30 pounds ahead of the normal for you, and are handed a diet which is intended to correct such flagrant misbehavior on the part of the scales, you would be ashamed not to follow that diet!

Brush Hair Daily

You know you are supposed to brush your hair vigorously every day, but you probably don't, and someone with hair in the shining glory class would look your mop over and tell you how—to bend forward from the waist and brush, brush, brush. About 150 times a day would be considered a good average brushing. You would also be instructed to keep your skin scrupulously clean by either the soap-and-water method or by using cream, depending on the salon.

Since the salons with good reputations like to add to these reputations by getting results, more than likely some member of the staff would be delegated to keep after you fairly closely to see that you did your homework on all these things. Then, when it was all over, the finishing touches—a new hair-do and maybe a new batch of cosmetics—would show up. You might look so good you'd be surprised at yourself.

No Exercise Stand-in

"That," you would think, "is what money can do!"

It can do plenty . . . there's no question about that! But don't feel sorry for yourself if you can't afford to put yourself in the hands of these experts. Good as they are, they can't furnish a stand-in who will do your exercises or go on your diet. You have to do the bulk of the work yourself—and at home!

Should Widow Turn Business Meeting to Social Account, By Asking Interesting Man to Call?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some time ago I met, in a business way, a man whom I liked, instantly, very much. After not having seen him for several months, he called me for a date. I accepted the invitation and since then have been in his company several times. Due to a slight misunderstanding the last time we were together, he seemed more distant than usual, and as I have not been at home many evenings since, I have wondered if he has telephoned me again.

I am a widow, have been for several years, and of all the men I have met, this man appeals to me in so many ways that other men have not. To me, he is all that could be desired in a man. In the near future I will again have occasion to transact business which will make it necessary for me to meet him face to face. Do you think it would be all right to casually remark that I have missed him, and to ask him to drop by some evening for a chat? I feel that I would have lost something worthwhile if I failed to keep his friendship. Please answer soon.

ANXIOUS.

DEAR ANXIOUS: If and when a man wants to get in touch with a woman by telephone, he usually manages to do so, regardless of how little time she spends in the vicinity of that instrument. When she doesn't hear from him, she is safe in assuming he has made no effort to contact her. As to whether to tell this man, on the occasion of a business meeting, that you "have missed him" recently, and that you would like to have him "drop by some evening for a chat"—I think it might be all right to do so, if the remark were (or seemed to be) spontaneously proffered. But I don't think it should be laboriously, or pointedly, inserted into an otherwise impersonal, professional exchange.

However, you might manage it this way, if the situation plays into your hands: you might, at the moment of greeting him, say (in a cheerfully confidential aside, supposing others are present): "Hello, John. It's nice to see you. How have you been? I've missed you recently. I've been so terribly busy, with one thing and another. But we must get together again. Do call me one evening——" And then turn immediately (if he doesn't take up the challenge) to the business of the meeting.

If it is to be a tete-a-tete conference, at which no others will be present, such an approach might be awkward, inadvisable and productive of mutual embarrassment. Under such circumstances, I think you should confine yourself strictly to business in a pleasantly noncommittal way, and let overtures (if any) of a personal kind come from the man. I do not think it would be well, either during the confab, or at its conclusion, for you to take the initiative in promoting further social engagements.

If your heart is set on turning this opportune meeting to social account, I think you should employ strategy that is indirect rather than aggressive. That is to say, I think you should go looking your prettiest, feeling your fittest, and, so far as the eye can see, with your mind entirely intent on business. Such an attitude, when combined with the requisite amount of intrinsic feminine attractiveness, is far better calculated to evoke an emotional reaction from this particular man than thinly veiled gestures of invitation, or even open solicitation. Schedule for "Housewife"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would like to offer a schedule to "Housewife," your correspondent of April 14, who complains that with two small children and one servant, she finds no time for either rest or play. This is a schedule which permits the maid to do the housework in the mornings, while the mother cares for the children—thus leaving her free for social activities in the afternoons.

Here it is: Monday mornings, laundry; Tuesday and Wednesday mornings, ironing; Thursday mornings, dusting and putting the house in order; Friday mornings, thorough cleaning of one-half the house; Saturday mornings, thoroughly cleaning the other half. After lunch, the children are put to bed for naps. While they sleep, the maid puts the house in order for the day. When they awaken, the maid gives them her entire attention, until their mother's return.

Young children should be in bed by 6 p. m., so that their parents may enjoy dinner properly served by the maid. Two or three evenings a week the maid stays with the children while the parents go out or entertain at home. If the maid cooks dinner, the the mother should give the children their supper and put them to bed. The morning work must be started early, in which case breakfast dishes may be washed after lunch. With a systematic routine, no one is overworked and the household runs smoothly. Sincerely, EXPERIENCED.

Value of Exercises

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: As usual, your advice of April 14 to "Housewife" is sound. However, I'd like to add one suggestion—taking 15 minutes of exercise to radio music each morning. This will give her more energy, hence cut down irritability and likewise improve her complexion and figure, thereby giving her added confidence in meeting people (since she complains of being "ill at ease in company"). Exercises have done all this for me. I take time to do them, although I have two children, aged 1 and 3 years, and a maid who comes only of afternoons. (Also, I find I have more energy since I gave up smoking!) Sincerely,

N. H. W.

Sauces Add Zest To Many Puddings

Wholesome cereal and fruit puddings which are suitable for the children of the famliy are often unpopular with the adults. The most docile father is apt to rebel a bit when his dinner dessert too closely resembles his breakfast. On the other hand the most obliging mother frequently finds it too much work to make two desserts for a meal, one that is proper for the children and another that will please grown-ups.

A fine way to straddle this problem is to supplement the pudding with a special sauce which may be added by the adults.

The following recipes will be found delicious with many simple puddings, such as are made with fruit or with rice, farina, or bread. They also add a touch of glamour to plain loaf cake or day-old plain cakes.

NUTMEG HARD SAUCE

1 cup brown sugar
1 cup white sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups water
2tablespoons butter

Mix the sugar, flour, salt and nutmeg together. Add 2 cups of boiling water and cook until thick. Add the butter, stir well and serve. This is good with jelly roll.

Singer Succumbs to 'Small-Girl Look'

Jessica Dragonette, concert and radio singer, consistently listed among the best-dressed women in radio, lived up to her title when she arrived in Washington this week, dressed in this quaint black and white costume. Robert Piquet, the young British designer, did the jacket in lightweight twill, the skirt in shepherd checks, and the collar in gleaming starched linen. The hooped can-can petticoat is in the same embroidered cotton as the enormous little-girl sailor of milan and lingerie

How Frock Fits Reveals Chic Says Singer

Jessica Dragonette Outlines Theories Of Dressing

By Marshall Adams.
The Post Fashion Editor.

METICULOUS care must be exercised in wardrobe selection if one would gain the reputation for chic that has pursued blonde Jessica Dragonette during her more than ten years as prima donna of radio. Now that the fair-haired girl of the airways has launched herself in personal appearance concert tours and is now appearing at a local theater, she employs her characteristic love of nice detail in both her personal and stage wardrobe.

The youthful singer, winner of nearly all the personality, popularity and ability polls in the radio world, is as generous with her hints on good dressing as she is with granting her famous encore requests of "Annie Laurie" or "Indian Love Call." Here is the formula for chic from the 1937 victor of the Fashion Academy Award for "Best Dressed Woman in Radio"

Dress for Each Song

"Clothes play an integral part in every woman's life, whether artisan or artist," said Miss Dragonette. "I feel personally that fashion is a definite part of my career, so that I think of a gown not merely as a gown, but as the embodiment of a song. Every song, you know, was written to convey a thought or emotion. Consequently, the dress I wear when I sing must help me project a feeling to my listeners."

If Miss Dragonette sings a Spanish melody, she wears a vivid Spanish gown; if she sings "Ave Maria," she envelopes herself in a simple white robe of austere lines. This policy of dressing the part of the song, she says, "puts me in the proper gay or melancholy mood and I can feel the dramatic import of the music so much more intensely."

Hints for Chic

Although every woman cannot be dubbed "The Pocket Venus" as Miss Dragonette, has been, each one can add to her natural endowments, the singer believes. Since Miss Dragonette is slightly above 5 feet tall, one would suppose that her platform career had caused her to search out garments that would enhance her height. Not so! Being a realist about herself and others, she advises:: "Never struggle to look tall if nature does not intend it that way. The proper fit and proportions of your garments is far more essential than a never-to-be-requited desire to look 5 feet 5 when there is only 5 feet 2 of you."

Along the same vein, Miss Dragonette suggests: "See that you get the best possible fitter for all your clothes. Get one who understands and is sympathetic to your figure and your desired proportions. See that details and cut of your gown suits your individual silhouette. So that you are perfect unto yourself. Then learn to breathe deeply and to stay in the pink of good health. All of these habits aid the figure and the posture. Walk with the head high and shoulders well placed and you will look taller and more 'regal.' Perhaps this advice is the secret of the compliment often paid Miss Dragonette, "she walks like three queens—not one."

Chocolate Frosting Hint

If the chocolate frosting for your cake is beaten too stiff, don't worry for you can bring it back to the right consistency so it will spread easily. Add just a little glycerine, a very little at a time. This is much easier than recooking it, or starting it from scratch again.

The Gentler Sex

—By Malvina Lindsay.

Woman's Sphere

I.

Why must a woman always be pulled from so many directions.
As I seem to be?—There is my husband with his manifold small boy needs,
From the time he gets home until he leaves the next morning.
And his call for companionship, unspoken, but yet if unheeded.
Giving him the semblance of a lost and wandering dog sniffing at strangers,
No, I cannot take chances on breaking this delicate tie I have builded and strengthened.

II.

There are my children with their eyes and their voices Always lifted toward "Mother," and their hearts and minds grasping
So eagerly after a greater fullness of life and in all faith expecting
That I will supply it, or at least point the way toward it,
And I must not fail them nor neglect to share fully
Their precious moments of childhood while no veil hangs between us.

III.

And yet in the back of my mind
there is always the vision,
Of my parents at home and of how with eyes loving and wistful,
They are looking toward me and are living again in my moments
And are wanting to know of my smallest concerns—to see me, to hear me,
No, I cannot fail them nor can I miss tapping the treasures
That lie in their wisdom of years, in their gossamer touch on the future.

IV.

Then there are my friends, past and present, who push in upon me,
Some with sorry, drab lives who are looking so eagerly toward me,
For the heart-warming handclasp of love and remembrance.
There are others in strength and in joy now abounding
Who enliven, inspirit me, give me urge to press forward.
No, I cannot slight friends and grow old—hard, tight-lipped and lonely.

V.

Now that should be all—no, there are my neighbors and all of the people Within my community, even my city, and always I'm wanted
To enlist in this effort, to help in that drive, and I cannot say smugly,
"Oh, I am all right, and now
why should I have to bother with others?"
Then there is this terrible specter of war and I have that odd guilty feeling.
That I should try to do something—why not, we are all of us humans?

VI.

Yet the days are so short, and so is the cycle of life and my strength not unfailing, Shall I do this or that?—So many things beckon and summon,
I stand futile, bewildered, "What thing should come first?—then
I suddenly know
That it is my own spirit; that this entity "me" whatever it is,
must give to each moment.
Its fullest expression; that it must guard its own peace, keep its own spark rekindled,
And that this done, the rest will fall in its own patterns of order and beauty.

New Evening Dress Does Triple Duty

Hollywood, Calif., April 9.—Priscilla Lane has a tip for travelers who go forth lightly. It's a three-way evening dress of ivory slipper satin she took with her on the "Family Reunion" location jaunt.

The basic dress is strapless for very formal occasions and can have a slim hoop run through its hemline. For a more conservative affair Priscilla dispenses with the hoop but fastens jeweled straps with clamp ends to the bodice. For dinner she wears a snug basque with long sleeves. It has a gold zipper up the front which ends in a cluster of amethyst grapes.

Diplomatic Dinners Prelude to Week-End

Justice and Mrs. Douglas Head List of Guests at British Embassy; Three Chiefs of Missions Honored

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

AS A PRELUDE to the exodus from the Capital this week-end when half of Washington will be off to New York for the official opening of the World's Fair, a round of dinners given by diplomats, officials and residentials enlivened last evening's social calendar. The British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin, the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Marc Peter, and the Charge d'Affaires of the German Embassy and Frau Thomsen were among those entertaining.

HOPE R. MILLER

The newest Supreme Court Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas headed the list of guests at the British Embassy. Others in the company were Senator and Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar J. Procope; Representative and Mrs. Bruce Barton, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Hornbeck, Mrs. August Belmont, Lady Malcom, Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, Mrs. Arthur Woods, Robert B. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spruks, Sir Owen and Lady Chalkley, Myron Hofer, Henry Hoyt and Angus Malcolm.

Three chiefs of missions—the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; the Italian Ambassador, Prince Colonna, and the Brazilian Ambassador, Carolos Martins, who was accompanied by Senora de Martins—were rnaking guests at the dinner given by the French Ambassador, who will entertain again at dinner May 10, having as honor guest then Mlle. Eve Curie.

Others at last evening's dinner were Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, the Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon, Senator and Mrs. Edward R. Burke, Representative and Mrs. Hamilton Fish, the Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John Hanes, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Rumbold, Count and Countess Guerino Roberti, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Marion Warburg, Mrs. Barbara Sessions, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Achilles, Baron and Baroness Baeyens, and M. and Mme. Charles Lucet.

Senator Tydings At Swiss Legation

A smaller dinner was the one given by the Swiss Minister and Mme. Peter in the legation on Kalorama Circle. Ranking guests were Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, the Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fotitch, and the Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan.

The dinner at which the German Charge d'Affaires and Frau Thomsen entertained was one in a series they are giving this season. Mr. and Mrs. F. Lammot Belin were others who had guests dining with them last night, their party being given in honor of Count and Countess Tyszkiewicz, who have been visiting them for several days.

Representative and Mrs. Clarence E. Hancock were hosts to a company of 18 at dinner and for the ice show in the Blue Room of the Shoreham last evening. Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose also had a small group dining with her before the ice show. Maj. and Mrs. W. P. T. Hill were still others on the list of those entertaining at dinner.

Norwegian Royalty Begins U. S. Whirl

Starting their social merry-go-round the minute they arrived in New York yesterday, Norway's Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha will sail up the Hudson today to be guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Hyde Park until Sunday. Their whirl in Manhattan will begin at top speed on Monday, when they officially open the Norwegian Pavilion at the World's Fair and are guests of honor that evening at a reception given by Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt.

Their Royal Highnesses will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Boomer at the Boomer Tower apartment in the Waldorf-Astoria during their New York stay. Mrs. Boomer is a Norwegian and a personal friend of the couple, and her husband is president of the Waldorf-Astoria Corporation.

Several members of the Diplomatic Corps, social notables and leaders in the field of art and industry will gather in the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday evening for the banquet in honor of the royal visitors given by official committee for Norway's participation in the New York World's Fair. Chairman and toastmaster of the event will be Rolf Stranger, Norwegian industrialist, who has come from his native country especially for the event.

Notables to Attend New York Banquet

Among guests at the dinner will be Count and Countess Folke Bernadotte of Sweden (the latter is the former Estelle Manville of New York). The Crown Princess, as you know, was Princess Martha of Sweden before her marriage.

The Minister of Norway and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, who left Washington earlier this week, will attend the banquet, as will Sir Louis and Lady Beale; Consul-General and Mrs. Rolf Christensen, of Norway; Commissioner and Mrs. Frederik Odfjell, of Norway; Commissioner General and Mrs. Vilhjalmur Thor, of Iceland; Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, and Mrs. LaGuardia; United States Commissioner General and Mrs. Edward J. Flynn, Rear Admiral Clark H. Woodward, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Hugh A. Drum, Senator and Mrs. Henrik Shipstead, Senator and Mrs. Alexander Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. Grover A. Whalen, Representative August Andresen and Representative Harold Knutson.

Wed in California, Couple Fly Here to Make Home

Snapped just as they boarded a plane for Washington are Mr. and Mrs. Philip Field Herrick. Their wedding took place on April 23 at All Saints Episcopal Church in Beverly Hills, Calif. Sra. de Munilla Entertains at Ladies' Tea

With the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Martinez Fraga, more or less quiet socially since his return from Havana, most of the entertaining by members of the embassy staff is being done by the Military Attache and Senora De Munilla. They have given a number of dinners and luncheons recently and yesterday afternoon Senora De Munilla was hostess at a "ladies tea" in their apartment at 2400 Sixteenth street.

Spring flowers, and the sunshine pouring in through the many windows of the spacious rooms, made the effect a gay and cheery one. Flowers were everywhere—on tables, mantels, and the buffet, which was centered with a large vase of sweetpeas.

The dark-haired hostess received her guests in the hall, wearing a floor-length gown of pale blue net with a lace jacket to match. Mrs. Thomas Cajigas and Mrs. L. L. Biamon were among those pouring tea during the afternoon. In one corner of the dining room was a bowl of cooling punch.

Among those who called were Senora De Caceres, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of the Honduran Legation; Mme. Pierre Benech, wife of the Naval Attache of the French Embassy, in a dark blue print and matching hat; Mrs. Preston McGoodwin, Miss Peggy Duffy, in a black frock with a natural colored straw hat; Miss Angela Kromeyer, sister of Senora De Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador; Senora De Baron, whose husband is Counselor of the Cuban Embassy—she was in navy blue; Senora De Herrera-Arango, wife of the Second Secretary of the embassy, and many others.

Mrs. Stanley Gives Luncheon At Home Near Laurel, Md.

Mrs. William L. Stanley, wife of the former assistant to the Attorney General, entertained at a small luncheon yesterday in her home near Laurel, Md. These spring days Washington residents who have an opportunity to spend take advantage of it, and a number drove out yesterday for the informal party thte hostess planned a few days ago when she was driving in to Washington from the luncheon given at another country home, that of Mrs. Thurman Arnold, in Virginia.

The Stanley home in Maryland faces a broad rolling lawn shaded by huge trees and bordered with flowers no in full bloom. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley and their daughter, Miss Mary Jane Stanley, come in to Washington to spend two winter months in their partment at the Mayflower, but when spring rolls around they always move back to thteir Maryland place.

Guests yesterday, lunching in the dining room where walls are decorated with pictures of Gen. Robert E. Lee, Andrew Jackson and framed bills of Confederate currency, were served a typical Southern menu featuring smothered chicken and lemon chiffon pie that had everybody asking the hostess for a glance at her cookbook. Later the company moved to the sun porch, where coffee and a gay round of conversation rounded out the party. The Stanleys recently returned from a vacation trip to Bermuda and the hostess recounted some of the amusing experiences they encountered en route.

Among the guests yesterday were Mrs. Donald Richberg, who is busy these days with moving plans—she and her family will soon leave the place in Kenwood that they have accupied for some time for their new home in Spring Valley; Mrs. J. Edward Burroughs, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, who is planning a motor trip to California with her family this summer; Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mrs. Bulkley Griffin.

Threatening war clouds prompted Mr. Long, a former United States Naval officer, to send his family back to America until more stable conditions prevail in Europe.

Brazil's Commissioner General Sends Huge Invitations to Fair Pavilion Opening

REPRESENTATIVE SOL BLOOM: Your enormous invitations to sesquicentennial celebraions have at last been been surpassed in size. The commissioner general for Brazil to the World's Fair has sent to Washington resident bids which just miss being a foot long and 9½ inches wide. They are for the opening of the Brazilian pavilion at the fair, which will take place May 7 at 2:30 p. m. If the party is anything like the opening of the Brazilian pavilion at the San Francisco fair, when several hundred bottles of champagne were uncorked, it should be a good one.

The Brazilian Envoy and Senora de Martins will, of course, be present, as will most of the embassy staff.

APPEALS FOR HELP! Four attractive Georgetown bachelors —Larry Knapp, Henry Whitney, Neil Conner and Henry Ehrlich —are about to have all their furniture taken from under them by a landlady who wants to set up housekeeping herself. Anyone with excess chairs, beds and tables will please get in touch immediately . . . Elsie Ekengren thinks someone must have taken by mistake a Harris tweed coat which she wore to Donald Downs' party last Saturday night, and hasn't been able to find since.

The late Mr. Flood was a brother of Senator Byrd's mother, Mrs. Richard Evelyn Byrd.

MR. and Mrs. Alexander Weddell are at the Anchorage to say good-by to their Washington friends before sailing for Spain, where Mr. Weddell will replace Claude Bowers as envoy. Dr. Bayh Says D. C. Needs Playgrounds

District Lags in Physical Education Field, He Charges in Summarizing Views Of Experts Given at Association Dinner

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Well rounded personnel, familiar with modern trends, adequate time allotment and increased gymnasium and playground areas are the needs for furthering the physical education program n the District.

These were listed as the chief requirements by Dr. Birch E. Bayh, director of the department of physical education in the public schools, as he presented a summary of the panel discussion held last night at the dinner meeting of the Women's Division of the District Physical Education Association.

Miss Augusta Griener, of Wilson Teachers' College, president of the in various educational fields participated in the discussion.

Dr. Chester Holmes, assistant superintendent in charge of junior high schools, opened the discussion. He advocated giving physical education five periods instead of two, thus putting it on the same basis as major subjects such as mathematics and languages. He urged more formal gymnastics than free play in which children naturally indulge after school hours; more folk dancing, greater developmentof intra-mural sports and more attention to correctiable physical defects.

Mrs. Doyle Speaks As Parent

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the board of education as a parent, stressed the opportunity of the physical educator for instilling habits of healthful exercise "which will carry over into after life so that at 45 they won't be fighting a waistline. Parents want all children so taught and directed that after they are through school, health habits and desire for healthful exercise will continue."

Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, speaking from the standpoint of a physician, emphasized the importance of considering the needs of the individual child. The physical education teacher is in a strategic position to look beyond poor posture to such possible causes as malnutrition or overfatigue, she said, and to detect disabilities which may be corrected.

Miss Genevieve Gabower, of the juvenile court, speaking as a social worker, assigned major importance to the lessons in co-operation and team work children learn through constructive play. This contributes in a valuable way to the physical, mental and social development and adaptability for which the social worker looks. Often, she said, the physical education teacher has greater opportunity to help children in learning to get along with others than does the classroom teacher.

Thomas Parker, assistant director of the Federal art projects, approaching the subject from the standpoint of the artist, cited the close relation in the period of Greek culture between athletic supremacy and art achievement. He told of the WPA art projects and their value as recreational outlets for both children and adults.

N.Y.A. Administrator Is on Program

Dr. Thatcher Winslow, National Youth Administrator, said physical education faces a great challenge in the opportunity of helping to solve the problem of the 4,000,000 young people who are through school, unemployed and in need of constructive ways to occupy their enforced leisure.

Physical education, instilling the habit of regular exercise counteracts the inertia of idleness; offers a club or team as something to which to belong—invaluable in bolstering morale—and, gives opportunity for achievement with a group which boosts self-confidence, he said. He also emphasized its value in promoting democratic ideals, tolerance, fair play, respect for and obedience to law.

Despite all the WPA and NYA are doing for the unemployed youth, there is still an urgent need for more recreational facilities and recreation leadership personnel—a problem deserving the attention of physical educators, he said.

Mr. Bayh, in his summary, pointed out that the need for increased personnel, greater facilities and adequate time allotment, so far as the schools are concerned, demands that the curricula be examined in the light of modern trends.

"It is a question of relative values," he said. "If we were all completely sold on physical education there would be no question of adequate provision for it. Washington is far below the average in gymnasium and playground areas."

To Give Play

"This Night Beware," a three-act mystery-comedy, will be presented by the Woman's Club of Riverdale, Md., tonight in the auditorium of the Riverdale School. The play is directed by Mrs. J. D. Schroeder, and the cast includes Nancy Barnard, Anita Lutz, Phyllis Orton, Zora McCall, Emily Schroeder, Crenshaw Jones, Allen Clark, John Wharton, Clyde Balch, John Starr, Richard Bragg and Noble Owings, jr.

Landover Club In 20th Year

A skit portraying the activities of the Landover Community Club was presented at its twentieth anniversary dinner last night at the Lord Calvert Inn. Mrs. Laura Bassette, the president, presided.

The club, with a membership of barely 20, has had an enviable record of accomplishment from the beginning. In the first years of its work it paid the school teacher's board for a year; put lights in the schoolhouse, purchased a lot for a playground, built sidewalks around the school; kept cinders and gravel on the road before it was paved and is now looking toward a clubhouse which will serve as a community center for the young people.

The women organized a junior girls' club some time ago. The little community provides no recreation facilities for either boys or girls, so that is the club's next concern. The clubhouse fund has $300 now and the members plan to add $100 a year.

Among the founders present at the dinner last night were: Mrs. Priscilla Thompson, first president; Mrs. Myrtle Smith, first secretary; Mrs. Martha Rea, first treasurer; Mrs. Earl Sheriff, and Mrs. Charles Humphrey. Mrs. Edward Shegogue, who joined two months after the club was formed and has continued one of its most active members, also was among those present.

Announce Date

St. Gertrude's Guild will hold its annual Country Fair at the school, 4801 Sargent road, next Saturday afternoon, May 27, weather permitting.

League Opposes Vote on War

Opposition to war referendum legislation was voted yesterday by the General Council of the National League of Women Voters, closing three-day sessions at Hotel Washington.

This followed action asking for repeal of section 1 of the neutrality act, dealing with embargoes and arms and war implements.

Although Mrs. Elliott R. Corbett, of Portland, Oreg., proposed dropping from the League of Women Voters' program its support of the League of Nations on the ground that the League of Nations is not now functioning, the general council voted against such action. Delegates argued that League of Nations social and economic accomplishments, quite apart from political action, justified continued support.

Opposition to racial discrimination laws to make sure that refugees shall not be excluded on the basis of race was also voted.

The league also vigorously reaffirmed its stand against the so-called equal rights amendment.

This continued opposition was voted following an announcement that this amendment had been reported to the House Judiciary Committee by a sub-committee.

The three-day general council sessions ended with a luncheon titled "Pointers From the Press," at which the principal speakers were Miss Kathleen McLaughlin, of the New York Times; Charles Ross, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Ernest Lindley, of The Post.

Leonard Checks Macks as Nats Win, 6 to 3

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The curse of the college football player in the big leagues—over-developed shoulder muscles that make him a sucker for a high ball pitched inside—may yet send Sam Chapman into the backfield of George Marshall's Washington Redskins.

POVICH

Marshall attempted unsuccessfully to induce Chapman to play professional football last season. He wanted in his backfield the big fellow who was such a power with the University of California's 1937 team and who was a near-unanimous all-American choice even before California slaughtered Alabama in the Rose Bowl. But Chapman saw before him a future in big league baseball.

He had been personally recommended to Connie Mack by no less than Ty Cobb, who for the last 10 years has been sunning himself on the Pacific Coast, clipping the coupons of his Coca-Cola stock. Given Cobb's blessing, Chapman was signed by Mack. He broke in with a splurge. In his first game he hit the distant center field scoreboard in Cleveland, and home runs started bounding from his bat. And there was evidence that he was better than a fair outfielder.

Chapman's batting average for his first two months of the season was something to respect. There was evidence that he was the prize rookie of the season. And then, apparently, the pitchers began to get wise. Chapman's average slumped. He finished up the season with a very modest .259. In the eyes of the baseball critics, Chapman was still a great college football player.

This season, Chapman isn't in the regular outfield lineup of the A's. Dee Miles, a minor leaguer once tride by Washington, was given the first shot at the job, and now it is being held by Lou Finney, a .275 hitter last year. All spring, according to the Philadelphia correspondents, Chapman "couldn't buy a hit."

Football Overdevelops

Fast in the wake of Chapman's skidding batting average and the turn in the California lad's baseball fortunes, Mr. G. P. Marshall put in an appearance in the Athletics' dressing room yesterday. He reasoned rightly that now, perhaps, Chapman would listen to a professional football offer. Chapman did.

"He wants to play pro football," said Marshall. "He said he'd ask Connie Mack for permission to play with the Redskins next fall, and he thinks he'll get it. He's a smart boy, that Chapman. He knows there's money for him in pro football, as much as he can make in baseball unless he makes good in the big leagues."

Marshall visions Chapman as a potent asset to his Redskins. Before they claimed anybody else at the finish of the 1937 season, the Redskins put in a claim for Chapman on the college draft list. Coach Ray Flaherty and Marshall had seen him perform for California. They liked the way he blocked, the way he tackled, and the way he lugged the ball through and around the line.

"Baugh, Farkas, Chapman and Pinckert and Irwin—that would be a nice backfield for the Redskins," mused Mr. Marshall. "And that's the backfield we'll have unless Connie Mack spoils our plans."

But getting back to the business of college football stars in big league baseball, football fame apparently is the cross they bear. Rarely does football ability and hitting ability go hand in hand. At least, that is baseball tradition.

Thinks He Has Permission

Clark Griffith is probably the staunchest disciple of that belief. "It don't work out, I tell you," Griffith was saying yesterday. "Those football fellers can't be good baseball players. They're over developed in the shoulders and arms. Strength up there is great stuff for football where they have to tug and haul, but it ruins 'em for baseball. It's a different kind of game.

"Those football fellows are muscle bound in the shoulders, I tell you. They can't get that bat around quick enough when the ball is pitched high and inside. They've got the strength, but they're not quick enough. Against smart pitching they shouldn't get a hit in a month. Any pitcher who gives 'em anything else but a high one inside should be fined."

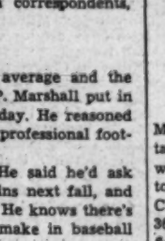
Griffith's experience with reformed football players is based chiefly on the case of Freddie Singston, now with the Dodgers. The Nats held title to Sington for five years in the hope that he would learn to hit high ball pitching. Back to the minors he would go, compile an impressive batting average, and get another trial with the Nats. And it was always the same story.

"Down there in the minors, sure those fellows hit well," said Griffith. "They hit well because they hit minor league pitching. Those pitchers either don't know where to pitch or don't know how. But in the big leagues we've got fellows who can stop those muscle-bound guys. If I ever sign another college football player, I ought to be examined."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 27.—American editors and publishers, who are holding their annual convention here this week, believe that organized baseball teams should advertise much more extensively than they do today. We took a Galloping Poll of them at the Banshee luncheon yesterday and found them almost unanimously resentful of baseball's tendency to demand three-fourths of a sports page's space in return for a $5 advertisement.



CONSIDINE

"A lot of us are just waking up to the fact that baseball is not much more of a sport than a bargain-basement sale in a department store," John H. Perry, head of the American Press Association and Western Newspaper Union, said.

Robert L. Smith, Charlestown, W. Va., publisher, doubted whether papers were getting back in revenue what they put into baseball. He listed the cost of sending reporters with the ball clubs, telegraph tolls, holding editions to get in final scores, and the extra cost of "setting" agate box scores. "Baseball forces a lot of other good sports out of the papers," Smith said. "I think we should stress sports like golf and tennis a little more. They're overlooked, when you consider the number of people who play them."

George Dolliver, Battle Creek, Mich., publisher, believes that the typical 5 or 10 line advertisement inserted by rich big league teams is completely out of proportion to the papers' return.

"It would be silly," Dolliver said, "to expect a team like the Detroit Tigers to advertise with us, for instance. But it definitely would seem morally bound to advertise more extensively in Detroit papers. And that, I think, is true of all big league clubs."

Only a sharp cutting down on the free advertising given to baseball would impress baseball owners, Ward Wayborn, of the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner believes. "Papers need baseball, but not as much as baseball needs newspapers," he said.

Frank Daniels, Raleigh, N. C., newspaper executive, thinks baseball is still the biggest selling point a sports page has to offer to its readers. "That's not only true of big league baseball either. We sell a lot of papers because we stress semipro baseball, for around my part of the country that's the hottest thing in sports."

Arthur Treanor, of the Booth papers, of Michigan, believes that the most serious mistakes he has seen sport pages make of late is the amount of space given to the recent fights of Joe Louis and Tony

Mrs. Pugh Wins Keefer Golf Tournament

Manor Club Player Nets 36-Hole 161

Helen Dettweiler Is Low Gross Winner With a 169 Score At Chevy Chase

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Mrs. Gale E. Pugh, another of Manor Club's list of champions, retained her opening day's lead to win the Mrs. Frank R. Keefer Cup tournament yesterday at Chevy Chase with a 161 net total for the 36-hole event. Mrs. Pugh was the first winner in the eight-year history of the tournament to retain a lead at the end of the first day, and the highest handicapped champion.

There was no cause for surprise in awarding the low gross prize as Congressional's champion, Helen Dettweiler, tacked an 84 to an opening 85 for a 169 total, a four stroke edge over a clubmate, Mrs. Myron Davy. The latter, leader with an 84 on Wednesday, started even with women's par for five holes but ran into trouble and finished with an 89.

Cards a Net 83

Mrs. Pugh, winner of the duffer's tournament four years ago, added a 54-47, 101 total, minus an 18 handicap, for a net 83 to her previous 78 for the trophy. After starting with an eight when her approach shot on the first hole caught water in a trap, Mrs. Pugh played steadily for several holes before encountering another eight on the sixth, and going out in 54.

After a start that would have dismayed most 18-handicapped players, Mrs. Pugh rallied on the back nine, starting with a par 3, dropping a tricky 15-foot putt on the twelfth hole, and finishing consistently for a 47 and her most important victory.

The winner was in the last threesome to finish, and until that time Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, and Mrs. Charlotte Stern, Indian Spring, were tied for the title with net 162s. They took second and third low net prizes. Mrs. Stern had 44-42—36, and Mrs. Pray, 43-46—89, for their final net rounds, and deducted 6 and 7 handicaps, respectively. Their rounds were among the best and most consistent of the event.

Wives of two District golf professionals finished among the select circle of prize winners, Mrs. George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, tying Mrs. Davy for fourth low net, and Mrs. Leo Walper deadlocking Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, Manor, for sixth. Mrs. Diffenbaugh added 104-18—86 to a net 79, while Mrs. Walper scored another 88 from nines of 44 each, and subtracted a 5 handicap for two net 83s and a 166 total. Mrs. Dowdall had 96-10—86, and 166, and Mrs. Davy, 89-85, minus a combined handicap of 8, for 165.

Second Lowest Round

Mrs. Walter Stokes, Indian Spring, winner of the tournament two years ago, had the second lowest round of the day, an 85, but was a shot out of the prize list due to a bad first round.

Miss Dettweiler's principal achievement over the 36 holes was missing every sand trap but one on the well-traped course. A 44—40—84 could have been several strokes lower but the Maryland State champion's putter is a little off. She played near-perfect golf from tee to green over the entire route.

Mrs. Frank R. Keefer, Women's District Golf Association president, 1930 through 1932, and donor of the trophy, presented the prizes with Mrs. Robert A. Lacey, '39 president of the organization.

Chisox Defeat Tigers in 13th On Pinch Hit

Steinbacker's Single Drives in Run for 2-1 Marathon Victory

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 27.—Detroit's Tigers, who defeated the White Sox in 14 innings the last time they met a week ago, tried the long course against the Chicagoans again today, but were edged out, 2 to 1, on Hank Steinbacher's pinch single with one out in the thirteenth.

Charley Gehringer's seventh inning homer off Jack Knott was the only Detroit tally as Knott and Clint Brown scattered nine hits and the latter was aided by four fast double plays in the last six innings, two of them started by himself.

Centerfielder Mike Kreevich, who singled four times and scored both Chicago runs, tied the count in the home seventh on two outs and Marv Owen's third single. Al Benton, who had minimized 13 Sox hits in the first 12 innings, was removed for a pinch hitter in the thirteenth and Japhet Lynn, rookie right hander, was the victim of the winning run.

Kreevich started the home thirteenth by singling to left. Advancing on Ken Sylvesteri's grounder, he stole third and came in as Steinbacher, regular rightfielder benched before the game for light hitting, lined a single in front of Pete Fox in rightfield.

Catcher Birdie Tebbetts placed Detroit in a strategic position by opening the thirteenth with a dobule, but was stranded on third when Bill Rogell walked and was doubled on Bill Christman's grounder and Rudy York's pinch effort was only a fly.

Big Roberto Ortiz, Cuban pitching sensation of the Nats' training camp, was released yesterday to Washington's Charlotte club of the Piedmont League. He parted company with the Nats before pitching a ball in the big leagues.

ORTIZ

Since the start of the season, with Manager Bucky Harris daring not to trust the crude Cuban with even a relief assignment, Ortiz has been languishing on the Washington bench. He is being sent to Charlotte "for seasoning," according to Harris.

"At Charlotte he will get the experience he needs," said Harris of his 6-foot-3-inch fellow who attempted to make the big hop from the Cuban sandlots to the big leagues in one stride. "We're holding title to him, and he'll get a tryout again next year."

Harris is still intrigued by Ortiz's fast ball and he believes the Cuban may develop control. "But at Charlotte we'll find out," said Harris. "We'll find out, moreover, whether he's a pitcher or an an outfielder. They'll use him in both jobs down there, and from what we've seen of him, I have an idea he may have a future as an outfielder if he fails as a pitcher. But make no mistake, he can throw a ball harder than 90 per cent of the pitchers in the big leagues."

Coincident with the announcement of Ortiz's release was the announcement that the Nats had recalled Pitcher Walter Masterson from Charlotte. Masterson, who pitched and won the Charlotte club's opening game, is visioned as a pitching sensation by Harris, who will attempt to break the 18-year-old lad into a regular job by giving him relief assignments.

D. C. Colored Nine Boasts Outstanding Star in Awkward

Far and away the most graceful outfielder of his ball club.

That's a claim advanced by Manager Ben Taylor in behalf of Centerfielder "Tiny" Awkward, who will make his debut at Griffith Stadium Sunday afternoon when Washington's Royal Giants inaugurate their Negro International League season against Norfolk's Black Tars with a 2 o'clock double-header.

Awkward in name only, towering "Tiny" is described as a sensational flyhawk endowed with a great throwing arm and a lad destined to take his place with the defensive stars of Negro baseball.

Gilbert's Ban From Md. Tracks Extended Till Fall

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 27.—The Maryland Racing Commission announced today the suspension of Jockey Johnny Gilbert had been extended to September 18 because he appeared at the Havre de Grace, Md., track during his present suspension.

Gilbert was suspended last fall after his testimony before the commission in a ringer case, the suspension to stand until May 1. The commission's order instructed him to stay away from Maryland tracks.

September 18 is the beginning of the fall racing season in Maryland.

Cronin Cracks Wise

Handley Rejoins Pirate Club Today

Peoria, Ill., April 27 (AP).—Lee (Jeep) Handley, third baseman of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who has been recuperating here from a head injury received when hit by a thrown ball, said today he would rejoin the team in St. Louis tomorrow.

Handley talked to Manager Pie Traynor of the Pirates by telephone today and told his chief he still experienced a dizzy feeling on awakening in the morning and that his ear bothered him yet.

Handley was hit on the ear by a fast ball pitched by Johnny Allen, Cleveland hurler, in an exhibition game at New Orleans before the National League season started.

Manager Traynor in Chicago yesterday blamed his team's slump on the loss of Handley.

Washington Routs Caster In Second

Knuckler Allows 9 Hits; Nats Slug Hard To Win Series Opener Collect 13 Safeties

By Shirley Povich.

The Nats caught up with George Caster, their opening-game conqueror, in the first two innings yesterday. They drove him from the mound with five hits and then unloosed eight more at his successor, Lovell Dean, to achieve a 6-3 victory over the Athletics.

They came out punching, piling up a 5-1 lead in the early rounds with a long-range attack and coasted to the decision on the pitching of Dutch Leonard.

Leonard bamboozled the Athletics with his fluttery knuckler to score his second victory of the season and pitched the Nats into a tie for fifth place in the league's vital statistics. He allowed nine hits, but during the first five innings, when the Nats were making away with the ball game, the Dutchman was pitching three-hit ball.

A pair of three-baggers unloaded by Charley Gelbert and Sam West didn't hurt the Nats any, and no pain was caused Washington, either, by a brace of doubles contributed by Taft Wright and Cecil Travis. In fact, the only Nat who went hitless was Leonard himself, who was preoccupied with his pitching.

Mackmen Threaten

There was only one point in the proceedings when the situation appeared sinister for Leonard. That was in the eighth when the A's hacked him for two runs to cut his lead to 5-3, and had the tying run on base with one out. But it wasn't strictly Leanoard's fault. Taft Wright had a treasonable hand in the Athletics' uprising.

Little Skeeter Newsome started the eighth-inning trouble for Leonard when he whacked a two-bagger over the head of Sammy West, who was underestimating Newsome's power, and Pitcher Dean followed with a single to left that scored Newsome. Then Wright lent the A's a hand by dropping Lou Finney's high fly to right field to the great amazement of everybody concerned. When Wally Moses singled with one out, to score Dean and move Finney to third, Leonard was knee-deep in trouble.

But he emerged nicely. He did it by striking out Bob Johnson on a knuckler that dipped into the dirt and enabled Moses to reach second, and then he purposely passed Nick Etten to pitch to Lodigiani, who obliged everybody but the A's by lifting a fly to George Case.

With Caster, who held 'em to four hits last week and shut 'em out, the Nats didn't dally yesterday. In the first inning Gelbert smacked a triple to the centerfield corner and Wright bashed a double against the rightfield wall and Presto! the Nats had a 1-0 lead.

Travis Doubles

They came back for more in the second inning, and got two more. Cecil Travis pounded out the third straight extra base hit, a double to center, and Jimmy Wasdell ushered him home with a single to right. Wasdell stole second, romped to third on Rick Ferrell's long fly and scampered home when George Case ripped a single through shortstop.

That uprising persuaded Connie Mack to dispense with Caster and in the third inning, after Pinch Hitter Ike Miles contributed a single for the A's first run, Lovell Dean took up the pitching. But the Nats didn't discriminate. In that third inning Sammy West whaled a three-bagger into right center and scored on Taft Wright's long fly. And in the fourth inning after Charley Gelbert walked with two out, West and Wright moved him home with singles.

The Nats didn't bother about any more runs until the eighth after the A's had cut their lead to 5—2. Rick Ferrell walked, took second on Leonard's sacrifice, and George Case banged him home with a single to center.

That's the way it went.

Al Simmons Hits Home Run in Eighth to Beat Phillies, 5-4

Clout Gives Boston 5-1 Advantage

Philadelphia Streak Ended at 4 in Row; MacFayden Routed; Earley Stops Attack

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 27.—Al Simmons' eighth-inning homer and Tom Earley's relief pitching gave the Boston Bees a 5-to-4 victory over the Phillies today to end the Phils' winning streak at four straight. Boston is the only team that has defeated the Phils this season.

Simmons' circuit clout was made off Al Smith and put Bees ahead, 5-1, the other four runs coming in the third when five hits drove Al Hollingsworth to the showers. The Phils, in turn, drove Danny MacFayden off the mound in the eighth and had the tying run on third with one out when Earley came into the game.

He retired Millies and Smith and, in the ninth, after little Emmett Mueller led off with a triple, got Hershel Martin, Chuck Klein and Morrie Arnovich on grounders to Fletcher.

Thompson Is Sold To Brown Club

St. Louis, April 27 (AP).—Purchase of Outfielder Rupert Thompson from the Chicago White Sox was announced today by the St. Louis Browns. It was a straight cash transaction.

Thompson, out of baseball all of last season because of an appendicitis operation, played with San Diego of the Pacific Coast League in 1937 and batted .326. He was with the Boston Nationals from 1934 to 1936, hitting .265, .273 and .286.

Simmons a Threat

Joe Glenn, the Brown catcher, isn't so sure but what Al Simmons might hit the Boston Bees into the National League flag fight. "If he comes up with a good year, look out," warned the former Yankee backstop. "To the day he left the Senators, we (the Yanks) respected him."

Peace in Europe has now reached the conscription stage.

If it gets any better, they will have to fight.

What the world needs is some old-fashioned diplomacy that can fool you more than 24 hours.

Goodman Paces Attack Of Redlegs; Derringer Registers Second

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, April 27.—Led by big Ival Goodman, the Cincinnati Reds romped over the Chicago Cubs today with an eight-run rally in the eighth inning for an 11-to-3 victory.

It was the second win of the season for Paul Derringer, the Reds' right-handed pitching ace, and ended a Chicago winning streak at four games.

Goodman hit his second home run of the year in the first inning with Bill Werber scoring ahead of him. He singled to start the eighth-inning spree, and when he came up later in the same frame, tripled with the bases loaded.

Larry French started for the Cubs and lasted until Harry Craft tripled in the eighth with two on. Vance Page took over until Goodman's triple and Jack Russell finished.

Derringer gave eight hits and was in trouble in three innings. Stan Hack opened the game with a double, advanced on an infield out and scored on a passed ball.

Phil Cavarretta tripled to start the second frame and came home on Dick Bartell's sacrifice fly. Three singles added the third run in the sixth.

Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson,
(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Dutch Leonard, first Washington pitcher to score two victories this season, takes the lead in the Man of the Month contest following his triumph over the Athletics yesterday. Points are distributed as follows on the basis of yesterday's game:

To Leonard, five points, because he pitched nine-hit ball and held the A's to five hits while the Nats were compiling a 5-1 lead in the first seven innings.

To George Case, one point, because he made two of the Nats' hits, stole two bases, and ended the game with a brilliant catch of Finney's low line drive.

To Charley Gelbert, one point, because he belted a triple and a single and played a steady game in the field.

To Sammy West, one point, because he hit a triple that led to a run, and helped to drive in another run with a single.

To Taft Wright, one point, because he drove in the Nats' first run with a double, and later drove in two more runs.

Galento. "Their opponents have been such set-ups that the outcomes of these matches were never in doubt," Treanor complained. "And yet millions of words were written about them, under the guise of sports."

W. T. Christian, of the Richmond (Va.) News Leader, revealed that racing news results sells more papers than any other sport. He ranked football results second, and baseball third.

Dempsey Wants Five Minutes' Notice From Galento

Speaking of boxing we ran into Jack Dempsey over at the Stork Pub the other night, sitting within a left hook's range of Gene Tunney, and queried him on his long-range argument with Two-Ton Tony. Galento recently said, "If that bum Dempsey puts the rap on me any more, and I see him around Orange, N. J., I will leave him have one."

"Yeah," Jack laughed, "I read that, too. Where does he get that stuff, threatening me. Don't he know I haven't got a license to fight in New Jersey. If he wants to fight me, let him come over to New York. All I want is five minutes notice, to let my beard grow. But seriously, I don't want any trouble with Tony. He's a big lovable slob, and I hope he makes a lot of jack. But he shouldn't threaten people," the Mauler said, a little hurt.

Tunney thinks that the Louis-Galento fight would have grossed many more potatoes if it had been staged about the time the fighters were signed. He thinks now that it will do about $600,000, as against $200,000 for the Baer-Nova match. Gene rattled off these figures with a slight yawn, for once upon a time he earned $900,000 fighting ten rounds against the man who was sitting a few feet away from him.

It is interesting to see those two fabulous bully-boys nowadays. They're putting on a little weight, and the dignity of middle age is settling on them. But deep inside them—for all their exterior friendliness—they still bristle at the sight of each other as much as they did in the mauling, bloody 20 rounds that forever made the two of them.

Cleveland, April 27.—Jeff Heath's homer in the ninth inning today wasn't enough to keep the Indians from going down to a 4-to-2 defeat before the St. Louis Browns.

Heath's wallop over the rightfield fence came with Earl Averill on base. Until the ninth, when Cleveland got a pair of safeties, Pitcher Johnny Marcum had limited the Tribe to five hits.

The Browns peppered Willis Hudlin for four runs in eight frames. St. Louis counted two in the third when Marcum singled, Grace doubled, McKuinn was purposely passed, Kress beat out a hit to score Marcum and Grace tallied on a

Chick Evans Says Leave Stymie Rule Alone—It's Golf

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 27.—From the sidelines Chick Evans casts a dissenting opinion on the Western Gold Association's decision to eliminate the Stymie rule from the Western amateur and the Western junior events.

The veteran Chicago golfer won the Western Amateur title seven times and has played in the meet for the past quarter century.

"I do think the recent ruling is in error," said Evans. "The Stymie is a part of golf and by removing it some skill is lost."

That was his opinion despite the fact the Stymie rule has cost him several matches in past Western Amateur competition.

Evans said he hopes to compete in this season's meet at Oklahoma City, July 11-17.

President Nine Fates Its Test In Two Games

Fate of G. W. High Will Be Decided in Central Virginia

Alexandria, April 27.—George Washington High School's fate in the Central District baseball race may be determined this week-end, when the Presidents invade central Virginia for a pair of important games with leading conference nines. Tomorrow the locals are slated to meet Hopewell High, occupants of second place, on the Hopewell diamond, while on Saturday they move over to Richmond to engage John Marshall High, undisputed leaders in the district race.

The Presidents bowed to Hopewell here last week, 18-7, but on the following day displayed a reversal of form to trounce John Marshall, 10-6, to account for the only loss suffered by the Justices this season.

Johnny Murnane, victor over John Marshall here last week, has been nominated for the pitching assignment against Hopewell, while Lawrence Gardner, who was shelled by the Hopewell nine, probably will hurl against John Marshall. Both moundsmen have won two out of three games, Murnane having been beaten in ten innings by Petersburg, for his first defeat in 17 scholastic starts.

In addition to the two pitchers, both of whom alternate in outfield berths, 13 players will make the trip.

Roger C. Sullivan, prominent local business man and sports fan, has been elected captain of the Alexandria Softball League for the coming season.

Carroll Rush has been appointed league statistician and scorekeeper, and will announce a complete schedule for both divisions within the next ten days. The season will get under way May 15, with all games to be played at the Municipal Stadium.

Episcopal High School resumes its spring sports feud with its intersectional rival, the Hill School, of Pottstown, Pa., Monday, when both track and tennis teams will invade Pottstown for important matches.

Mount Vernon Independents will return to the diamond after an absence of four years on Sunday, when they inaugurate their 1939 season against Joe Staub's Burk A. C. on the Engleside diamond at 2:30. Ashby Snellings will hurl for the Mounts.

Greenbrier Teams Face Busy Week

Lewisburg, W. Va., April 27.—Greenbrier Military School athletes have a busy week-end ahead. The track team enters the Gazette Relays in Charleston, W. Va. The diamondeers meet Parkersburg High here tomorrow and Washington and Lee's Frosh in Lexington, Va., Saturday. The Intercompany Softball League gets underway.

In addition, the band plays in Winchester, Va., at the famous Apple Blossom Festival, and student journalists attend the annual United High School Press Conference in Huntington, W. Va.

Witness Did Not Claim To Represent Hialeah

Tallahassee, Fla., April 27 (AP).—The Associated Press erroneously reported last Monday that a witness told Florida Senate investigators he was offered $50,000 for Gov. Cone's campaign deficit by an agent for Hialeah Race Track and E. R. Bradley, noted sportsman. The witness, Fred Kent, of Jacksonvile, actually testified that the supposed agent claimed to represent only Bradley. He did not say that the agent claimed to represent only Bradley. He did not say that the agent claimed to represent Hialeah Race Track.

Ariel Toy Sore, May Not Start In May 6 Derby

Hugh Jackson's Star Develops Ailment At Havre de Grace

By the Associated Press.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 27.—Hugh Jackson's Ariel Toy appeared scratched from the Kentucky Derby today after he had developed soreness overnight. The winner of the Arkansas Derby was kept in the barn here instead of being shipped to Louisville as had been planned. Ariel Toy worked out over a sloppy track here yesterday and his owner-trainer expressed satisfaction with his performance. The son of Ariel was closing up in last Saturday's Chesapeake when he quit suddenly at the half pole, being eased up in the closing stages. Jackson was unable to explain this action and decided to give the colt his derby chance.

W. L. Brann's Challedon and W. E. Boeing's Porter's Mite got away as scheduled shortly after 1 p. m. They were loaded without incident at the siding near the grandstand entrance. A few of the early arrivals made them bon voyage.

Steel Heels Does Five Furlongs in 1.00 2-5

Louisville, Ky., April 27 (AP).—Junius Bell's Steel Heels virtually assured himself of a starting place in the Kentucky Derby today by dashing 5 furlongs in the sparkling time of 1:00 3-5 handily.

Clockers caught him the first quarter in :23 2-5 and the half in :47 4-5.

With Jockey "Frency" Dostier keeping a snug hold throughout, Technician, from the Woolford Farms, breezed around the Downs in 1:42 2-5 handily.

Timeful moved a step nearer Derby condition as he breezed three-quarters in 1:15 3-5, while John Marsch's Lightspur stepped the same distance in 1:16 2-5.

Milky Way's No Competition and On Location arrived during the morning from Keeneland.

McKinley Faces First Interhigh Test in Anacostia Game

Central Nine And Wilson Also Meet

Both Games Will Start At 3:30 P. M.; Tech Game at Tech; Central Plays at Western

By Bill Burnett

Its first taste of interhigh baseball competition will be taken by McKinley High's team today when it entertains Anacostia on the new Tech diamond starting at 3:30 p. m. It will be the second East division clash of the season, played at the same time that Central and Wilson take part in the third West division battle at Western.

For the lads under Coach Bruce Kessler at Tech, their start today marks the end of a stiff training session with very few actual games. Despite this, and even despite Anacostia's upsetting triumph over Eastern's defending champions last week, Tech probably will rule the favorite, and that will suit both parties concerned. Anacostia seems to work best from the underdog position, and a favorable rating may give the Manual Trainers much-needed confidence.

Selection of a starting pitcher for McKinley has been postponed until game time, but it will probably be between Dick Wine, veteran star, and Heinie Web, a 240-pound mound dreadnaught. Both are righthanders. The Indians will definitely counter with Art Faircloth, the same speed artist who fanned 13 Eastern batters while dishing out 7 safeties last week.

Over in the West section, Central will be forced to look to its novices since Dick Rozzelle, its one veteran, has already worked this week. Bill Fisher, Charley Kilgman and Martin Dies are the most likely choices. Wilson will probably use Herman Byer at the start, hoping he won't be blasted from the mound as happened in the Roosevelt shutout. If things get too hot, Joe Wells will be tossed in.

High school diamond activity doesn't stop with the interhigh get-togethers, however. Five other games are slated for the vicinity. Eastern moves out to Washington-Lee to test the brilliant record established by the Little Generals so far, while Montgomery Blair High tangles with Georgetown Prep in the featured contests of the day. Up-and-down Bethesda plays host to C. C. C. Co. 356, Charlotte Hall Military Academy meets Hyattsville High on the latter's diamond, and Maryland Park High engages Bladensburg at Bladensburg.

State Golfers In Handicap Week

The Maryland State Golf Association's annual drive for handicap cards, starts tomorrow at its member clubs and continues through Sunday, May 7. "State golfers handicap week" opens the lengthy and varied tournament schedule of the association.

The income from the sale of the handicap cards is used to promote the scheduled events. Every golfing club member is requested to secure a card.

Members may turn in as many scores as they like over the period, and the club professionals will turn in the lowest card to the association. Low gross and net winners will compete in the finals May 10 at Rodgers Forge.

Play will be in three classes, "A" scratch to nine; "B" 10 to 15 and "C" 16 to 30.

Navy Crew in Final Workout for Row With Columbia

Navy Leaves For Columbia Crew Races

Varsity, Jayvees and Freshmen Meet Lions On Harlem River

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, April 27.—With Coach Buck Walsh making no secret of his anxiety over the outcome of the main race in the triple-header with Columbia on the Harlem Saturday, the Navy rowing squad left at 8 this evening for the scene of the conflict.

Walsh pointed out that Columbia has six of the oarsmen who rowed in the boat that furnished the surprise, next to the Navy's victory, at the Poughkeepsie Regatta last year by finishing fourth, the next Eastern crew to the Navy.

The race is expected to produce the keen rivalry whenever crews coached by Walsh and any of the Glendons meet. Hubert Glendon, at Columbia, and Walsh, Navy, are both pupils of the veteran Old Dick Glendon, though both have departed widely from the style of their perceptor.

Walsh also expects Columbia to have heavier crews in all three classes. The Navy varsity averages 178 pounds, which is within a pound of the weight of last year's champions, but the junior varsity averages but 168 pounds.

Walsh has boated his plebes for the Columbia race as follows: Bow, Raymond Baker, 170; 2, Harry Field, 150; 3, George Mahler, 180; 4, Bill Cross, 170; 5, Jim Leipper, 180; 6, Bruce McKalson, 168; 7, Bob Armstead, 165; stroke, Dion O'Sullivan, 171; coxswain, Jim Callender, 122.

The varsity and jayvees crews will be boated as against Princeton.

Ice Hockey Title Tourney Is Set

New York, April 27 (AP).—The Ice hockey committee of the Amateur Athletic Union today set March 1 to 3 for the 1940 National A. A. U. championship tournament. The site will be selected later.

The committee also recommended two rules changes for submission to the national convention in December. One would limit body checking to the defensive zone, with a major penalty for "flagrant violation of checking into the boards." The other change would prohibit carrying the stick above the shoulder. A warning and face-off would follow the first violation, with a minor penalty inflicted for repeated violations, and a major if injury results.

Hagerstown, April 27.—The Washington County Baseball League, which opened its season last Sunday, is boasting of two of its former players with major league clubs and nine others who have advanced to clubs in organized ball this season.

Bob Keller, Mount Briar team and the leading hitter of the league in 1935, is with Orlando, of the Florida State League, while Harold Brumbaugh, of the Chevies in 1937, is with the Charlotte club, of the Piedmont League.

Bob Barnhart, of the Chevies last season, is playing third base with the Valdosta team of the Georgia-Florida League.

Lester Hinkle, star hurler with the Hancock team in 1934, who starred last season with the Federalsburg team of the Eastern Shore League, will report next week to the same team.

Lefty Blessing, former Hagerstown High School star hurler and later with the Washington County League, who was signed by the Philadelphia Athletics, has been farmed to Federalsburg for this season.

Bobby Riggs In Semifinals At Hot Springs

Defeats Frank Shields, 6—3, 8—6, to Advance; John Doeg Winner

Terror Is Mat Victor Amid Boos of 2,000

Jack Hader Beaten After 17 Minutes in Feature at Arena

After 17 minutes of harmless hair-pulling, the second installment of the squabble between the Golden Terror and Jack Hader ended last night at Turner's Arena with the masked villain booting Hader across the ring and falling on him to take a doubtful decision in the feature bout.

Casey Berger's decision was greeted by rasping hoots of disapproval from some 2,000 fans who saw the Terror draw back his right foot and plant it firmly in the vicinity of Hader's stomach. The Kansas baker boy fell to the canvas writhing in pain. The masked groan artist then planted his 289 pounds atop Hader and was awarded the match.

Hader remained in the ring until handlers stepped in and carried him to his dressing room. A doctor examined him, stepped back, lighted a cigar and said, "He's hurt pretty bad, but he'll be all right." Across the room the Terror, between pants, made derisive catcalls at the prone Hader. All indications were that their feud will be continued.

In the preliminaries Laverne Baxter, returning to make his bid for local ring villainy, disposed of Dutch Schultz in 16 minutes with a flying scissors. At one point he started after a fan, but changed his mind when four policemen lined up in front of him.

George Pencherf defeated Ace Gordon in the semiwindup in 21½ minutes with an Australian frog scot. Rosy (Red) Ryan disposed of Ernie Powers with a crotch hold and body slam in 17 minutes, and Jim Clinstock defeated Jack Vincant in 16 minutes with a flying scissors.

G.W. Freshmen Beat Eastern Nine, 5 to 1

Toby Wright Pitches Fine Game; Oertel Steals Home

Toby Bright, crack left-handed pitcher of the George Washington University Freshmen, regained his best form yesterday, pitching a brilliant four-hit game as the young Colonials won, 5 to 1, over Eastern. Bright struck out 12 and was never in trouble as his mates gave him a two-run lead in the first inning.

Eastern went hitless the first three rounds but pushed over a run in the fourth on Cooksey's single and Cole's timely double. Thereafter Eastern was helpless against the G. W. southpaw, only two runners reaching first in the last five innings, and none getting as far as second.

Getting stronger as the game progressed, Bright set the side down in order the last three rounds. Meanwhile, G. W. was having trouble with Puddin' Lovett, chunky Eastern right-hander, who held them scoreless until the seventh after that first-inning uprising.

In the first frame splurge, Roy McNeil's single drove across two runs and the Colonials were blanked thereafter until the seventh when little George Oertel stole home for the third run. In the eighth, G. W. completed scoring for the day with two runs on hits by McNeil, Bright and Gray.

The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

By International News Service.

Years ago, there was a New York song publisher who used to call his song writers in and say to them:

"What you boys ought to do is write something the public wants."

RUNYON

That was always Bert Kalmar's favorite story. Bert Kalmar is Harry Ruby's partner in song and play writing. The team of Kalmar and Ruby was long a famous combination on Broadway. They have been out in Hollywood for years working on movie stuff.

Bert called us up when we were there and said he had finally figured out what the public wants. He said whatever the public accepts is what it wants. We do not see why it took a long residence in Hollywood to think that out, except that maybe Hollywood gave Bert more time for thinking.

Of course, it just takes us back to the beginning of the argument. Agreeing that what the public accepts is what it wants, what will the public accept? Do you know how much money is spent every year in this country alone trying to find that out? Billions. And no man can claim he has the right answer until he gives it a whirl.

65 Per Cent Lost

It is our conjecture that more money is spent on this endeavor than on anything else in this country, not barring government. Probably 65 per cent of the money is lost, leaving the seekers for the information with a good idea, not of what the public wants, but of what it does not want. Or at least of what it will not accept—which amounts to the same thing.

Millions of persons are constantly guessing at what the public wants. Those who hit on the answer usually get rich. If not rich, famous and popular. Those who miss out lose their time and sometimes their faith in humanity.

The commercial world, the movies, the theater, the radio and the newspapers are in on the guessing contest. Life would be pretty sweet indeed for the operators of those enterprises if they knew in advance what the public wants and did not have to do any fooling around with experiments.

Even the political world has to do a lot of guessing at what the public wants. In politics, however, not a great deal of consideration is given the question of what the public wants. The most thought is devoted to what the political master minds want. When it comes out that what they want is not what the public wants, the public is deemed quite short-sighted if not downright dumb by the master minds.

Just Like Life

When a fellow is fortunate enough to think up something that the public wants, he becomes a genius and moves in behind a big, high polished desk, and nimble minions respond to his buzzers. When that same fellow thinks up something that the public does not want, he is heaved out on his ear, and everybody says he is a phoney.

Of course it is quite true that in some fields of endeavor there are men who have amazing instinct for guessing what the public wants. They are the great men of their various worlds and are either high salaried or have a nice piece of their enterprise. They may not always guess right, but if they average .500 they do all right.

You take a newspaper column like this, to bring the thing nearer home. We would be tickled silly if we were dead sure what the public wants in the way of reading every time we sit down to the typewriter. In a few years we would be so prosperous as a result of the success of the column that we would be able to stop writing it and retire. Come to think of it, perhaps that is something the public wants.

If you think the public does not know what it wants, and what it does not want, you are in grave error. Many ordinarily sagacious men have made that mistake. Because they fancy something themselves they decide that is what the public wants, or ought to want, and try to cram their idea, whatever it is, down the public throat with disasterous consequences to their own interests.

Obstinate Public

The public is pig-headed and obstinate when it comes to something it does not want and no amount of force or cajolery can change it. Sometimes it does not want what may be a good thing, though in general the public is oftener right than it it wrong. Anyway, there is no appeal from its decision. If it breaks your heart, you just have to go away quietly and try to patch up the pieces.

It does no good to rail at the public taste when the public decides it wants something. That is what it wants. We have come to the conclusion, after giving this matter probably even more thought than Bert Kalmar, that the best thing to do is to find something that the public may not want, but has to have.

Hargrave Nine Defeated, 8-5, By Fork Union

Big Third Inning Gives Victors 4-0 Lead for 4th Straight

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fork Union, Va., April 27.—Fork Union won its fourth straight victory here today by defeating Hargrave, 8 to 5.

The victors got off to a 4-to-0 lead in the third inning when Evans walked and scored on Moschler's error of Taylor's grounder. Krammerer then drove in Werder and Taylor ahead of him when he hit one of the longest home runs of the season. The Cadets then put the game on ice in the fifth when McElwee singled and Evans tripled.

Jockey Ensor in Comeback at 39

Confident of Three More Years Riding 'On Good Behavior'

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., April 27.—Lavelle "Buddy" Ensor, wizened and gray, is on the jockey come back trail at 39.

Ensor, who once had the racing world at his feet when he rode Exterminator and other thoroughbred greats, couldn't stand prosperity and hero worship and strayed from the straight and narrow.

Today he admits that he beat the stewards to the punch and set himself down—meaning that he quit the saddle because he liked the liquid in bottles too well.

But he is off the stuff now and is confident he has at least three more years of riding in his system. Each morning you'll find "Buddy" skinning around the Churchill Downs oval, crouched on a horse, fitting himself for further exploits in his comeback.

The Baltimore rider is old, as jockeys go. He is wizened from the hard outdoor life but he still is capable of making 105 pounds and booting home winners as attested by his three victories the closing day at Tropical Park, where he began his return to the saddle.

Handed a clipping of a racing chart of September 17, 1920, which showed he had ridden five winners and finished second in six races, Ensor commented.

"That's nothing. I've ridden five out of six 14 times and once at Laurel rode six out of seven, the seventh one being over the jumps."

JOCKEY ENSOR WITH PALS

In his heyday "Buddy" rode for such fashionable stables as those of George Carlisle, R. T. Wilson, Sam Hildreth, Walter Salmon, John Hay Whitney and Walter M. Jeffords. He now is under contract to the Lewin stables of Miss Lillian Lewin and will steer the runners Harry Goldstine in conditioning for the Chicago sportswoman. He also plans to accept outside mounts.

Affair Scores First Victory of Career at Havre de Grace

JohnManfuso Derby Hope Pays $6.70

Blazing Heat Wins Place Honors; Beats Out Tanganyika in Feature Purse

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 27.—Galloping over the same track where his daddy, Osculator, turned back Equipoise and Mate in the Havre de Grace Handicap of 1933, Affair, the property of John A. Manfuso, scored the first victory of his career today in The Modesty Purse, the feature race. A Kentucky Derby candidate, 85 per cent out of the Louisville classic by his owner's admission, Affair seemed at home in the muddy going and Jockey Johnny Adams, who had ridden only one previous winner at the meeting, had to do little more than guide.

Purchased by the Washington sportsman in the Saratoga sales, Affair had failed in two starts this year. Today, at a mile and 70 yards, he found his form. Breaking on top from the No. 1 post position, the colt saved ground at the first turn to go to the back stretch accompanied by Guyencourt, a Derby candidate owned by the Brandywine Stable.

Affair shook off Guyencourt seemingly without effort and went into a good lead while rated. Blazing Heat, the favorite, came wide for racing room and moved up almost abreast of the ultimate winner nearing the three-quarter pole. Adams drove Affair for a brief period and the colt disposed of this challenge and went on to win easily. Blazing Heat was second and Tanganyika was third.

Affari was well backed at a $6.70 mutuel. His time was 1:47 4-5.

Daily double players who make a practice of picking a likely winner and playing him in combinations with all other horses, lost money today when their bet brought only a $7.60 collection, the smallest twin wager pay-off of the season.

Abrasion, owned by J. W. Y. Martin, was the day's "sure thing," and he raced accordingly. Paying a $2.70 indivdiual mutuel, the Canter colt jogged home five lengths ahead of his nearest rival, Balky Fox. Molasses Julia, stablemate of Challedone, was third. Charlie Stevenson had only to guide the winner, which carried top weight of 120 pounds.

The "double" transaction was completed by Maewhisk, a $6.90 shot, in the second race. With Vincent Polk doing the booting, this one got up in the concluding strides to collar the front running Roving Eve, a field horse. Patchpocket was third.

In the Spring a Young Horse's Fancy Turns to Thoughts of—Wallowing

Springtime hits the Kentucky Derby haunts, and look what happens. Steel Heels, Junius W. Bell's Derby hopeful, took the day off from galloping around the Churchill Downs oval to enjoy himself. PATCHPOCKET worked way to contention on inside and came willingly in closing test. BARGAIN BOY came with good courage to show excellent effort. SACHEM, slow to begin, improved position steadily on outside to close full of run. GRAND DUKE was forwardly placed from start and weakened in closing sixteenth. CAIDON went evenly. DUNSANY had early speed. The others were outrun.

SYLVIA G., keen forward factor from start, raced ALBUQUERQUE into defeat to get to front, lugged in during stretch run and lasted to end. CHIEF EVERGREEN went to contention on outside approaching half pole, swung in to save ground entering stretch and was in close quarters between winner and rail in final stages. Fateman's claim of foul against SYLVIA G. was not allowed. TRANSIT LADY was taken under restraint along backstretch, moved menacingly in straightaway, but weakened. ANGUS was shut off twice swinging for stretch and closed full of run.

ROWES CRUMP, allowed to settle into stride and a distant trailer for five furlongs, went very wide for racing room, gained sharply thereafter and closed with rush to win, opening a long gap. BUILDING TRADES, saving ground at first turn, shook off LADY ORCHID, opened a long lead, but weakened in closing stages. CAMARADERIE came with rush under pressure in final eighth. BOUNDING COUNT dropped far out of it and closed some ground. LADY ORCHID stopped.

Selections at Havre de Grace.

Dear Al,

The famous Pimlico double, the Dixie Handicap and the Preakness Stakes, has been accomplished by four horses. Tom Ochiltree won both races in 1875; Duke of Magenta in 1878; Grenada in 1880 and The Bard in 1886. It is noteworthy that these doubles were, in each instance, accomplished the same year. Since the last one in 1886 no thoroughbred has won both events either in the same year or otherwise, although Display, Preakness victor in 1926, and Victorian, first in the Preakness of 1928, finished second in the Dixie renewals the year following their triumphs in the Preakness. Of the 39 Preakness eligibles four still remain maidens, they have yet to win a race. The Preakness nonwinners are: Hal Price Headley's Atatime; Brandywine Stable's Guyencourt; Belair Stud's Challenge and Shandon Farm's Yankee Lad. However, since all four were named in the last $100 payment list it seems likely their owners regard them as potentially good thoroughbreds and will no doubt be seen in the winners' circle within the next three weeks. The Chesapeake Stakes at Havre de Grace last Saturday was a reversal of the Pimlico Futurity of last November for three of the starters. The futurity was won by Challedon, who finished third in the Chesapeake. Gilded Knight, Saturday's winner, was third six months ago and Impound second to Gilded Knight at Havre de Grace, was a distant fifth in the futurity. Both races were decided over a distance of a mile and a sixteenth. The Preakness efforts of all three may find another reversal with Impound due to take the No. 1 position if such things are decided in a "take your turn" order. A Pimlico Futurity winner has never gone on to win a Preakness, but one second and four thirds in the juvenile event have shown the way in the Preakness. In 1928 Dr. Freeland was second to High Strung in the Futurity and six months later won the Preakness. Display was third to Canter in the 1925 Futurity and won the 1926 Preakness; Mate was third to Equipoise in the 1930 Futurity and won the 1931 Preakness; Burgoo King was third to Top Flight in the 1931 Futurity and won the 1932 Preakness and Dauber was third to Nedayr in the 1937 Futurity and won the Preakness last year. In the Futurity at Pimlico last November, Third Degree was second and Gilded Knight third. Their chances in the Preakness are good, provided Challedon, the Futurity winner, doesn't upset the tradition of a Futurity winner not taking the Preakness.

BILL.

First race—Air Stream appeared at home on a heavy track when he was third to Rumba Gus last Wednesday. The son of Aerial is improving with every start and has the edge in an open race. Can't Tell makes his racing debut in this event, but, being a son of Mate, he should do some running on his own account. Smilin' Jack raced well in Florida. Has good chance.

Second race—Belay was easily best of a fair field of maidens in the first start of his career and falling in with a mediocre bunch today he figures slightly best. Gridiron raced well, two lengths behind Sun Plume, beating such as Aircuda and Skyflier. He may prove hard to beat. Rose Baby won her last in mud and should take care of the others.

Third race—Romaunt did not care for route racing in his last heat and back in sprint here he should win. He is a superior muddler, is in good hands, and will have the services of the veteran Glenn Smith. The Serf showed good effort his only start this season and will like this track. Cackle Time for third place.

Fourth race—Phara Belle was over her head when racing for allowances but in her previous race she beat platers of this caliber. She has a slight edge over Banner Girl, which easily figures next best. The latter is beginning to do good again after a dull season in Florida and may turn the tables on the top horse. Dorothy Pomp has a money chance.

Fifth race—Morstep was no match for Hants on a fast track Tuesday, but whipped Ace Call and others when racing in muddy going last week. He gets the call in an open race. Ace Call was runner-up to the top horse last week, is in form, and will like the off track. Hants is the class of the race but is strictly a fast track horse.

Sixth race—Ann Mowlee whipped Maryland breds last outing and appears nicely placed in this event. This filly has apparently found herself after several good races at Bowie. Palkin failed to impress favorably but has shown speed in morning trials. Charles F. comes from behind and should get up for third place

BankingGroup Holds Annual Conference

25 Local Bankers To Represent D. C. At Regional Affair

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Twenty-five Washington bankers will form the local delegation to the seventh annual eastern regional conference of the National Association of Bank Auditors and Comptrollers, in New York, May 11 to 13, and Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston will also be represented by large contingents.

Comptroller Arthur J. Linn, of Hamilton National Bank, and a past president of the national association, will preside at the conference, while Harry E. Ward, president of Irving Trust Co., New York, will welcome the delegates. E. G. Armstrong, Kansas City, president of the association, will participate in the meeting.

The speaking program will include Dr. Marcus Nadler, of New York University, who was a speaker at last year's convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, at Hot Springs, Va., his subject will be "Bonds." "Accounting of a World's Fair," is the subject of another address.

Harry E. Downey, of Washington Loan & Trust Co., is arranging for the journey of Washington delegates, all of whom are members of the auditors section of the District of Columbia Bankers Association.

Housing Loans Increase

Loans under Title I of the National Housing Act on propery in and near Washington revealed another substantial advance in March, according to reports from the Federal Housing Administration. In March 243 loans were advanced by lending institutions with headquarters in the National Capital, and they amounted to $89,863, a large majority of these being extended by Washington banks.

From February 3, 1938, when the amendment to the National Housing Act was made, through March 31, 1939, there were 3,813 Title I loans made by local lending institutions, largely banks, involving a total of $1,631,655. As of March 31, 1939, a total of 2,855 Title I loans had been allowed on property located in the District of Columbia, in the aggregate amount of $1,226,431. Last month alone 166 of these loans were made with a total valuation of $77,624.

Loans under Title II also reflect a popular demand. From the beginning of the National Housing Act up to the end of February, 1,168 Title II loans had been granted on property situated within the District of Columbia, for a total of $7,885,050.

Title I loans are for repairs, alterations and modernization, and members of the District of Columbia Bankers Association have taken special interest in furnishing funds for such purposes. Title II insured mortgage loans, deal with permanent construction. The interest displayed in both types of these loans in this locality is considered specially helpful to business in general and the construction industry.

Reports from the Housing Administration also state that District of Columbia home mortgages accepted for insurance by that agency have been rising steadily during the current year, the number accepted in February being five times more than that of February, 1938.

In this city, during February, 1938, seven of these home mortgages were accepted for insurance, amounting to $54,700, while in February, 1939, 37 were accepted with a value of $203,800. In the first two months of this year 62 such mortgages were accepted, amounting to $353,200.

A report for the entire Nation discloses that home mortgages accepted for insurance by the Federal Housing Administration during February numbered 9,839 and aggregated $41,223,700, compared with 4,665 in February a year ago, amounting to $18,865,700.

Individual Bank Debits

Debits to individual accounts reported by Washington banks in March were 10 per cent above those of March, 1938, this showing being better than that of debits for the country as a whole, which advanced 4 per cent over the year-earlier amount. Standard Statistics Co.'s March Index of local debits is computed at 154 (average of 1920 to 1924 equalling 100), against 125 for February, and 139 for March, 1938. The local gain also compares well with the 5 per cent increase shown by the South Atlantic States, as an entirety.

Bank to Change Time

Daylight savings time starting on the New York Stock Exchange and other large exchanges next Moday, all Washington brokerage houses will go on the summer schedule on that date. Trading will begin at 9 a. m. and close at 2 p. m., an hour earlier than the winter schedule. Washington Stock Exchange will remain on its present schedule, however.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., has sent to all member banks in this territory a list of reserve banks which will go on daylight savings time, this information being helpful to bankers in connection with telegraphic transfers of funds. Time limit of the Richmond institution and the two branches for completion of wire transfers on the day of receipts will be an hour earlier than at present.

District of Columbia Insurance Sales

Life insurance sales in Washington, D. C., in March were practically the same as those of the month a year ago, the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, of Hartford, Conn., reports. The United States showed a gain of 2 per cent, while sales in this city for the first quarter were 17 per cent in advance of the period last year.

Wheat Prices Up One Cent In Late Rally

Unfavorable Crop News, Foreign Buying Aids Rise

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 27.—Wheat values rose a cent in a final hour rally today, with all contracts quoted above 70 cents a bushel, the highest since January.

Further unfavorable crop news from the winter wheat belt, a weather forecast that promised no immediate rain relief, nervousness prior to Hitler's address and enlarged international trade helped to stimulate buying. Previous short sellers covered with purchases on the upturn.

The market drifted through most of the session with prices very little changed from yesterday. July and September contracts eased as much as ¼ cent at times. When the buying started, however, all deliveries were lifted a cent above early lows, with May wheat, which has been weak recently because of predelivery selling, in the lead.

At the close prices were ½ to 1⅛ higher than yesterday. May, 70⅞-70⅝; July, 70⅝-70¼. Corn finished unchanged to ⅜ lower, May, 48⅛-48¼; July, 50-49⅞. Oats, ⅛-¼ higher. Rye, ⅜-½ up, and lard, to 10 higher.

Five Indicted for SEC Violations

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission reported yesterday that William A. Kenyon, Leon B. Smith, John W. Herron, Sidney R. Clark and Arthur A. Aschauer, all of Milwaukee, Wis., have been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury at Milwaukee for violations of the fraud provisions of the securities act of 1933, the mail fraud statute and conspiracy.

The indictment in 13 counts charged that the defendants about March, 1937, devised a scheme to defraud investors in connection with the sale of debenture notes of Tung Industries Inc., by means of false representations and promises. It was charged that the defendants caused Tung Industries Inc. to be incorporated in Delaware and managed and operated the Milwaukee Bond and Share Corporation for the purpose of selling the debenture notes and that contrary to the representations made by the defendants only a small part of the proceeds from the sale of the notes was applied to the acquisition and cultivation of tung tree groves.

Stocks Reach Highest Closing Since April 15; Average Rise 0.36 Point; Volume Up

New York, April 27.—Stocks edged forward again today, rising 0.36 point on the average, bringing stocks to their highest close since April 15. Volume picked up a little on the rise and despite irregularity in the final hour, the close was not far from the highs. Featuring was the runup of the aviation issues, the average of ten representative issues, as compiled by the Herald Tribune, gaining more than a point. Other divisions to make good gains included the steels, metals and rails.

Obviously the subject under discussion in the financial district was the reply of Herr Hitler tomorrow morning to President Roosevelt on his appeal for a 10 to 20 year nonaggression pact. Long before Wall Street goes to work tomorrow morning, the tenor of the German leader's remarks will be known, as his broadcast was set for 6 a. m. New York time.

Guessing on Hitler

Up to the close today, there was nothing but guesses in the financial district, but these generally were to the effect that Herr Hitler would not close the door to appeasement. It was assumed that he would spare nothing as far as the President of the United States is concerned but it was felt that the armament programs of the democracies and the partial success of Chamberlain in uniting smaller powers that might be threatened by Nazi aggressions, as well as the conscription move in Great Britain, will cause Der Fuehrer to tame his remarks sufficiently to permit discussions to take the place of warfare.

It is felt that he must realize the essential difference between the present situation and that which existed in 1914. At that time the democracies were virtually unprepared for war, both as far as armaments and the thoughts of their peoples were concerned. Now they are prepared in both manners, and in addition Germany has the additional risk that some of her Allies of 1914 would be found on the opposite side.

Steel Report Favorable

Consequently, the opinion in the financial district at the close today was that a favorable interpretation can be placed on the Hitler reply, which doubtless will have been heard by all Wall Streeters by the time this observation is read.

In the domestic field, the report of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, made available after the close, made more pleasant reading than did the report Tuesday of the United States Steel Corporation. Bethlehem showed 17 cents a share on the common for the first quarter of the year against 56 cents in the preceding quarter. Chrysler's report showed net profit for the first quarter nearly six times larger than for the same period last year and directors have declared a dividend of $1.50 a share, against $1 the previous quarter and 50 cents a year ago, sales for the quarter ran nearly $100,000,000 above the same period in 1938.

Amusement stocks held on today but were unable to move forward with the balance of the list, doubtless being held back by word that the Department of Justice will institute anti-trust proceedings against fourteen motion picture concerns tomorrow. Loft was down a fraction, this volatile issue being the subject of renewed litigation, which is not new to Loft stockholders. Metals improved as the copper market firmed. Continued demand for export metal moved the price to 10.24 cents a pound and scrap improved ¼ cent. Phelps Dodge placed a price of 10½ cents on domestic deliveries while other producers and smelters held to 10¼.

Government Orders Planes

Improvement in the aviation issues naturally reflected the war orders from the Government. The War Department announced the purchase of 571 fighting planes and most of the issues in this category improved, Curtiss Wright being the most active and adding seven-eighths while the Class A of the same company was up 1½.

Martin was 1¼ and Douglas 2⅜. Chrysler gained a point and General Motors nearly as much. Eastman Kodak continued its runup, gaining 1⅝ and both Steel and Bethlehem were up fraction. Southern and New York Central led the rails with small gains.

Among the commodities, wheat futures closed up ½ to 1⅛ cents and cotton was off 2 to 9 points.

Bonds Still Uncertain

Listed bonds remained dull and uncertain today, notwithstanding the good tone of the equities section. United States Treasury bonds continued their ponderous improvement, with 10 issues at fresh high levels. Speculative railroad bonds were mostly lower, but share privilege issues responded to the equity advance. In the foreign dollar department a good deal of uncertainty again was evident, owing to the impending new developments. Turnover was $3,990,000.

Long term United States Treasury obligations were marked higher by 1-32 to 8-32 point, which sufficed for records in almost all intermediate and long obligations. Guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations were in more modest request. Best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds developed mild firmness.

Speculative railroad liens tended to drift lower, possibly because of losses suffered as a consequence of the coal situation. Borderline and default rails joined the movement. Holding company bonds were neglected, but some of the industrial convertibles moved upward. Most local tractions drifted downward, but Manhattan Railway liens improved.

Decline Results From Sharp Dip In New York

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 27.—For the second time this year bank clearings, for the country as a whole, were smaller than in the corresponding period a year ago. Clearings at practically all of the outside cities at practically all of the outside cities remained at a higher level than last year, the decline being due to the sharp drop recorded in the New York total. The poor comparison at New York was in turn caused by the unusually sharp upswing in bank transactions which took place in that city during the similar 1938 week.

Total clearings for 22 leading cities for the week ended April 26 amounted to $4,826,239,000, according to Dun & Bradstreet. This was 10.3 per cent less than the $5,379,815,000 for the same 1938 week.

Clearings this week dropped $564,964,000 under the total for the week preceding. This was in contrast with the rise of $620,581,000 recorded between the two similar weeks of 1938.

Clearings at New York aggregated $2,902,640,000, against $3,574,422,000 last year, giving a decrease of 18.8 per cent. For the 21 outside cities the amount was $1,923,599,000, or a gain of 6.5 per cent compared with the $1,805,393,000 a year ago.

Except for a slight loss at Minneapolis, all outside centers reported larger clearings than a year ago.

tricks, unless the king of clubs lay doubleton, which seemed unlikely. With the diamond opening he knew that suit would split badly. So he decided to attack the hearts, leading the three. West and dummy played low and East's ten took. Mr. Raffel captured the diamond return with the ace and deliberated before leading another heart. His only hope lay in finding East with either doubleton jack-ten or doubleton queen-ten, he reasoned, for if this were so he could set up the heart nine in dummy by—— East coughed impatiently and Mr. Raffel led the heart king. West covered with the ace and East's queen fell.

South's theorizing had been correct, but West could have ruined his scheme by leading a club. Instead he led a spade, and South was in. Mr. Raffel returned his third heart and West had to take with the jack or concede defeat. No lead West now could make would keep Mr. Raffel from taking the heart nine, club ace and three spades for eight tricks and his contract.

Historian Scorns Move to Honor Gen. Doubleday

Williamsport, Md., April 27 (AP).—A town movement to obtain a monument to Gen. Abner Doubleday drew a historian's scorn today and the assertion that the general's service at Williamsport was "insignificant."

If Williamsport folks want a Civil War monument, wrote the Rev. George Gelbach, history professor at Cambridge High School, they should select one of the more important battles, or better still, depict in bronze a series of war scenes which occurred here and which "tell a story" of the war's development.

Federal funds have been sought to restore "Doubleday Hill," where the general—also noted as the inventor of baseball—repulsed the Confederates.

Williamsport plans to rebuild the gun-pits, repair the cannon and make the site a national park.

Applause for Secretary of Labor Perkins and the manner in which she presided at the White House Conference on Children in a Democracy.

Always a joke for the proper moment, always knitting up the jagged edges between speeches with a thread of fun, always giving the impression that she was having a huge time.

A pat on the back for politicians, a kind word for employers . . . Delegates scarce could believe it, but they loved it.

While it's never too late to enjoy an interesting personality, it's too bad the country could not have known six or seven years ago what a fringe of the population is beginning to learn about Miss Perkins today.

Government officials at the White House conference were thicker than hops. The one we enjoyed most, among those not on the program, was Dr. O. E. Baker, of the Department of Agriculture. He made an unscheduled plea for equal opportunity for rural children. He does it every chance he has.

Thomas S. Scribner, retiring file and record supervisor in the Naval Ordnance Bureau, will be a guest in his own home tonight at a party given by the members of his filing section.

Mr. Scribner, who lives at 3637 Warder street northwest, will be 70 on May 23, and his retirement at the end of the month will close a career of more than 40 years in Government service. He has been in the present division nearly 39 years. He is married, has three grown children, and is a fishing enthusiast. Among the tokens he will receive tonight will be a fishing reel, friends said.

Government, military and Congressional leaders will be among guests at the annual American Legion Ball, starting at 10 p. m. tomorrow in the Mayflower.

Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Frailey, of the Veterans Administration, is handling preparations for the dance, with the assistance of John L. Mulvey, of GAO, and Miss Jane R. Cox, of the Navy Department. Among committee chairmen and members are Joseph J. Malloy, L. J. P. Fichthorn, Edwin W. Luther, Capt. William Kershner, Mrs. E. Louise Warren, Mrs. Edith Quinn, Miss Emily Carey, Miss Winifred Nichols.

Members of the committee who represent Government legion posts include C. S. Beilman, Emmett R. Carroll, W. R. Clifford, George H. Fox, Heywood Saunders, Earl C. Rhue, Abrahm Miller, Joseph J. Ihlder, C. F. Noack, C. C. Ailes, J. A. Giovannoni, M. V. O'Brien, George R. Toth, Joseph M. Vallin, W. W. Williamson, Laura Stewart, Harry E. Ludeman, Harry B. Pollock, Henry M. Tunis and Alexander MacKinnon.

Besides the legion ball, several dances are planned for the weekend, including the Railroad Retirement Board Athletic Association dance at 10 p. m. tomorrow in the Wardman Park, an informal dance of the Federation Transportation Association, also in the Wardman Park tomorrow; Washington Chapter of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians at 10 p. m. today in the Pythian Temple, 1012 Ninth street northwest, and the Dexter Club, 10 p. m. today at the Almas Temple.

A new series of week-end tours to the New York World's Fair, to be sponsored by the National Federation of Federal Employes, were announced by Henry G. Nolda, who is receiving reservations at room 604, 710 Fourteenth street northwest. Primarily for Federal employes, they will also be open to anyone who wants to go along, from May 5 to October 17. Trains will leave every Friday at 4:55 p. m., returning Sunday at 7 p. m.

Two other World Fair trains are to run each week-end for A. F. G. E. members.

Books and athletics will be getting an equal share of week-end attention, according to plans in the Agriculture Department. Formation of a book club will be discussed at 4:30 p. m. today in the Administration Building penthouse, in a meeting arranged by the welfare section, Office of Personnel.

As for sports: 4:45 p. m. today, organization meeting of the table tennis club, room 4403 South Building; a moonlight hike with a marshmallow roast at the end, hikers leaving Twelfth and Pennsylvania avenue at 6:45 p. m. tomorrow; a splash party with novelty races at 7 p. m. today in the Shoreham pool; men's tennis association practice at 2 p. m. tomorrow on the Potomac Park courts.

Competitive examinations for a $4,600 job as senior air safety investigator with the CAA, and a $2,600 librarian position, with the Department of Justice, have been announced by the Civil Service Commission.

Internal Revenue Lodge, No. 47, A. F. G. E., will hold a dance in the Wardman Park Hotel Thursday evening.

Bob Burns Says—

I guess there ain't a single one of us who hasn't gossiped about somebody at one time or another. It's just human nature to tell tales out of school. Now I can't think of a person I know who ain't gossiped, unless it's my Aunt Peachy Sims. There was a woman who never said an unkind word about anybody. Even when she went to the Van Buren Ladies' Tuesday Bid-a-Wee Club she never stooped to the temptation of gossip. Aunt Peachy would just mention someone they all knew—who wasn't there—and then she'd just sit back and listen.

No, sir, that woman wouldn't say an unkind word against anyone if it killed her. But I DID notice that she always lined her garbage can with the editorial page of the Press-Argus . . . to make the garbage man think she was literary.

Her Majesty the Queen:

Duchess Took Active Interest In Promoting Child Welfare

No Figurehead, She Made Exhaustive Inquiries Before Accepting Executive Posts

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

CHAPTER XVII.

As soon as she returned from Australia, Queen Elizabeth cheerfully reshouldered all her varied work at home. Each pitiless post continued to bring numerous requests that she should become the president of several societies. Refusing ever to be a mere figurehead, she would never allow her name to be associated with any enterprise in which she was unable to play an active part. To accept the office of president is, she rightly considers, to undertake a serious responsibility, and this she would never do without making exhaustive inquiries into the purposes and methods of the society in question.

Once she has accepted it, the role of president always involves her in really industrious service. How often she was occupied in this service is shown by a glance at her engagements books of this period. Few women can ever have faced a more continuous or more varied succession of appointments.

One of Elizabeth's most fervent interests is care of babies in the British Isles. Here she is shown when, as Duchess of York, she visited a new set of triplets at Hammersmith Hospital in which she is greatly interested

Apart from the births of the two princesses, Queen Elizabeth's career has only once been interrupted by illness. At the end of 1935 she was for some weeks seriously ill with influenzal pneumonia, but she made a splendid recovery from this illness.

Short Convalescence

After a short convalescence at Eastbourne, she was able to resume all her usual activities, and last year, during which she and the King visited so many industrial centers, was one of her very busiest. On one of these northern tours she was thrilled by her descent of a pit at the Kibblesworth Colliery. For this adventure she wore a scarf over her head, a white overall and ankle boots and was armed with a pick-ax with which she hewed some coal.

Nothing interests Queen Elizabeth more than child welfare, so let us first glance at her occupied with the care of the very, very young.

In the healthy, high air of Highgate stands a very beautiful Jacobean building called Cromwell House, the wonderfully picturesque headquarters of the Mothercraft Training Society. The Queen is president of this organization. To quote its own prospectus: "The objects of this society are to instill the duty of health and to impress on women the great responsibilities of motherhood; to acquire and disseminate knowledge on all matters affecting the health of women and children; to train nurses, young mothers and girls about to marry, to look after the health and general well-being of babies according to the triumphantly successful methods of the founder of the society, Dr. Sir Frederick Truby King."

Students at Cromwell House are not taught to rely on hospital conditions and are made dependent on equipment unavailable in ordinary homes. The principles of the Truby King system can be carried out anywhere.

How Society Works

As is pointed out: "The society trains mothers and nurses, both boarders and out-patients, to use with care and intelligence the things present in even the humblest homes."

Besides teaching mothers their duty, this society also shows babies how to give proper satisfaction, and Cromwell House has a large number of cots ready for those who, owing to some form of malnutrition, have not been thriving as they should.

To follow Queen Elizabeth from the care of infancy to the care of youth, let us now glance at her as president of the Council of Girls Clubs.

Briefly stated, the purpose of this organization is "to unite girls' clubs of all denominations and districts and give help wherever needed." Lady Eleanor Keane, the chairman of the organization, told me how delightful it was to see the Queen at Cardiff with over a thousand factory girls crowding round her; and when she left the Town Hall there was a wild rush just to sit in the chair she had sat in, and cries of "Oh, isn't she just lovely!"

A Touching Scene

An eye-witness tells me the Queen's visit to the Liverpool Branch was most moving. To quote her words:

"The girls, usually very reserved and undemonstrative, were excited almost beyond bearing point. After the Duchess of York's arrival they were struck quite dumb for a few seconds, and when it was all over I found little groups actually weeping. Somehow the duchess, with her charm, meant their country to these girls. She was like a lovely flag. She was a symbol they could understand."

Another union of which, as Duchess of York, the Queen was president, is the United Nursing Services Club, opened in 1931, for the benefit of members of the nursing services who had taken part in the great war: a grant for the purpose being given by the United Services Fund. The founder of this club, which serves an admirable purpose, was Dame Ethel Becher, who, during the war, was head of the Queen Alexandra Imperial Military Nursing Services.

Conscription Plan Attacked

The Rev. Albert D. Belden, of London, in Washington as representative of British peace organizations, yesterday attacked Great Britain's new conscription program as a "fatal move" after the peace proposals of President Roosevelt.

The Rev. Mr. Belden said he had cabled leaders of his majesty'es opposition, "in the name of the peace workers of the world" to fight the conscription plan.

He said he came to Washington with a petition, signed by more than 1,000,000 persons, urging that a world peace conference be held.

Air-Crash Pilot's Certificate Voided

The airline pilot certificate of Charles B. Stead, flier of the airliner which crashed with the loss of several lives at Point Reyes, Calif., last November, was revoked yesterday by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

In its decision, the authority declared "it must be concluded from all the evidence that he (Stead) did not exercise the judgment, skill and prudence that must be required of an airline transport pilot."

Police to Clamp Down on Airgun Sales to Minors

Ruled "dangerous weapons" by Police Court Judge Curran, air rifles and air pistols yesterday became objects of special attention by Washington police.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, ordered close supervision of the sale of such instruments to children under 18. He cited a section of police regulations which makes it "unlawful for any person to sell to any child firearms, gunpowder or other explosive."

In a recent case, Judge Curran fined a dealer $15 for selling an air pistol to an 8-year-old boy.
